Meeting to ask:

Is PRV fat in fire?

BY DICK ANGLESTEIN

HARRISBURG — The proverbial fat may really be in the fire during October Pork Month.

Pseudorabies and more specifically forced depopulation without indemnification to control it apparently have heated to the boiling point between the state and some swine producers.

It's reported that a meeting will be called early next month by the Department of Agriculture among farm leaders and groups to review the pseudorabies situation and the forced depopulation policy of the Bureau of Animal Industry.

This session has been called apparently as a followup to a rather strongly worded letter that went out under the Pa. Pork Producers Council to the state calling for the forced depopulation policy to be rescinded.

The letter reportedly asked for a reply within two weeks and implied that more stringent measures might otherwise be taken.

The forced depopulation policy discussion centers around two primary viewpoints:

–When a positive PRV herd is found, it amounts to a tremendous economic impact on the producer, particularly if it's a breeding operation. While stock can be marketed, all breeding value – in both dollars and time involved in genetic development – is lost, as well as additional costs of downtime and cleanup.

–Against this is weighed the possible impact of the disease on the state's 18,000 swine producers, allied industry and possible effects on other livestock and dairy operations.

The slaughter house surveillance program and blood testing by the state is uncovering more incidence of the disease in the state.

Ten of the 14 breeding operations currently under quarantine have been found through the surveillance program.

The disease is found in the blood samples as sows and boars are periodically moved out of the breeding operations to market.

Including associated finishing operations, 31 quarantines are in effect by the Bureau of Animal Industry. One breeding operation discovery can result in several associated finishing operations being included in the quarantine.

Latest reports of the PRV herds have included both family breeding farms, in which a tightly closed operation is followed, and more commercial feeder pig operations that result in both the quarantine of the central sow facilities and the finishing operations.

The concentration of pseudorabies still remains in the northern and western sections of Lancaster County.

'New Beginning' for Brubakers

BY WENDY WEHR

MANHEIM—You might call Lowell and Deb Brubaker's year at the Manheim Farm Show a new beginning — this is the first year they've ever shown the grand champion Holstein. And they can thank "New Beginning" for that honor.

The five-year-old Hertzler Astro New Beginning took grand champion honors at the Manheim Farm Show dairy show on Thursday, and Lowell and Deb Brubaker were pleased with the win.

"She just calved a month ago, so she's looking real good," said Deb. The judge of the show remarked that New Beginning had the most dairyness and the best rear udder in the show. He also awarded the five-year-old the top place in the best udder class.

But there's greater significance to New Beginning's name. "She was a wedding present from my parents," explained Lowell, "So Deb and I named her "New Beginning" to mark the beginning of our new life together."

New Beginning is also a healthy producer for the couple, with a top record of 22,000 pounds. The Brubakers farm in partnership with Lowell's father, Harold. They have about 125 milking head.

Along with showing the grand

Extension to promote ag & tourism development

BY DICK ANGLESTEIN

CLEARFIELD — For the first time in its history, Penn State Extension is becoming directly involved in economic development, including not only traditional agricultural areas, but also tourism.

Clearfield County Extension is now seeking a fulltime staff member, who will be concerned entirely with Ag and Tourism Development and Promotion.

"We're in a kind of depressed area here," explains Harold Bock, Clearfield County agent, "and we need someone to coordinate small agricultural and tourism development projects that will permit our residents to supplement their income."

Possible areas of investigation:

Ag projects, such as rabbit production, growing Christmas trees, vegetable marketing and sheep production.

Tourism projects in rural areas, such as "Bed and Breakfast," longer-term farm tourists and recreational development.

"We're located conveniently between New York City and Pittsburgh," Bock said, "presenting a number of recreational possibilities.

'Concerning ag development, we now have only a few small vegetable tailgate markets and our reclaimed strip mine areas could be utilized for sheep production."

The groundwork for the Ag and Tourism Development post was laid last fall when a Clearfield County group started preliminary discussions on ways to boost the area's economy. The group included Extension, the County Farmers' Association, county commissioners and agri-business.

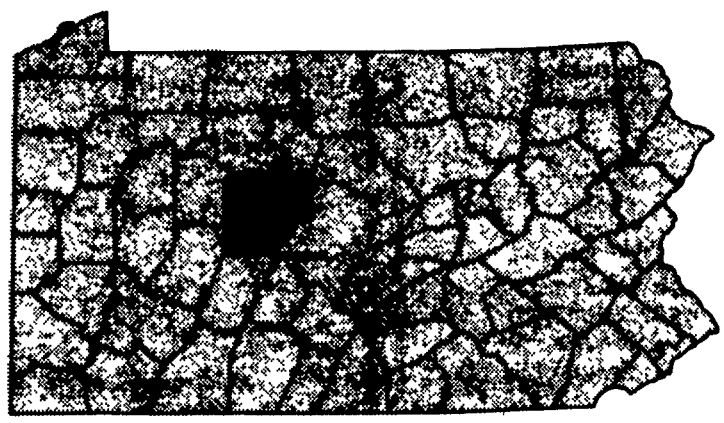
"We came up with a number of ideas, but saw the need for someone to coordinate the program," Bock said.

The county commissioners, who help fund the Extension program, suggested the concept be expanded also into the area of tourism..

Application was made for matching funds through the state's Ben Franklin program and a grant will permit getting the concept and its new and unique Extension position started for next year.

Bock also explained that a livestock auction will be held in Clearfield County this fall for the first time to stimulate 4-H livestock project participation. Clearfield has no regular livestock auction outlet.

In addition to the new Ag and Tourism Development and Promotion position, the Clearfield Extension also has a 4-H and horticulture opening due to the promotion of Jim Welshans to the Extension director post in Dauphin County.



Are BMP's the best way to tackle Bay problem?

BY DICK ANGLESTEIN

NEW HOLLAND — Are BMP's (Better Management Practices) – the heart of Pennsylvania's approach – the best way to clean up waters in the Commonwealth and reduce ag nutrient loading of the Chesapeake Bay?

Not in all cases, cautions a member of the USDA's Economic Research Service.

One of a number of speakers at a Thursday meeting in New Holland on cleanup efforts in the Conestoga headwaters area of Northeastern Lancaster County, Ed Young, of the USDA's Economic Research Service, stationed at State College, pointed specifically to Better Management Practices that control erosion, such as terraces, as likely being counter-productive in reducing nutrient loading of the Bay.

"Nitrogen loading is the most significant problem," Young said.

"You can't only address erosion control or you could help to actually increase nutrient loading."

As Young explained, nitrogen put into the soil either through manure or commercial fertilizer can go only four places.

–It can go into the crops.

–A small part can be volitilized and vaporized into the air.

–It can go into surface water.

–Or it can go into underground water.

Erosion control measures, as terraces, only hold the water and send it down into the ground along with the nitrogen faster and in greater concentrations.

Through the ground, the nitrogen can travel, into fractured rock formations to area streams and on its way to the Chesapeake Bay.

Another speaker at the session attended by more than 100 ag and political officials affirmed that nitrogen can travel very quickly after a heavy rain down through the ground and into underground water supplies.

James Gerhardt, of the U.S. Geological Service, which has been

Report supplied by USDA

MARKET COMMENT: Prices are changed. The market tone is weak, particularly on large and heavier sizes. Cartoned egg movement was light and disappointing. Graded stocks were fully adequate to heavy with mediums in a closer but adequate supply. Additional offerings are noted as readily available in both graded and ungraded packs, however most dealers found little need for more supplies.

A Extra Large .66-.68; A Large .65-.67; A Medium .55-.57.

Delmarva Poultry

Live supplies were fully adequate. Weights mostly desirable to heavy. Undertone unsettled but no better than steady.

Today's L.T.L. asking prices are generally unchanged on U.S. Grade A 49-55 cents.

The Bay — The Nitty Gritty

BY DICK ANGLESTEIN

In plain English, let's get down to the "Nitty Gritty" of the Pennsylvania problem of agricultural nutrient loading of the Chesapeake Bay

The problem is too many nutrients -- primarily nitrogen and phosphorus -- from too much manure And this is sometimes made worse by the addition of chemical fertilizers Studies have shown that Lancaster County has more than enough nitrogen and phosphorus from manure to grow its crops without the addition of one single pound of commercial fertilizer

Nitrogen is bring pointed to as the chief culprit Once that manure goes on the ground, the nitrogen can only go into the crops, a little into the air and most into surface or ground water

Too much is ending up in the water

The escape of nitrogen into the air is too small to be of significance Besides, farmers have been lectured not to let this happen

Can crops eat up more of the nitrogen? Perhaps, a little bit more can be used up by double-cropping as much as possible But its value is quite limited too

That leaves the nitrogen going into the water -- the crux of the problem. To cut down on the nutrients going into it, you must reduce the amount of manure going on the land And what possibilities are there here?

Methane digesters -- a glamorous idea that does nothing to reduce the number of nutrients left over after you've digested the manure and produced your electricity These nutrients must still be disposed of, besides just dumping them on the same ground The overall economics of digesters still leave a lot of unanswered questions, too

How about a far-out system of "destroying" some of the nutrients or permanently bonding them as part of a methane digester system or some other process Can you imagine the problem of trying to sell such a philosophy to farmers who have been told constantly to make the most of their resources

That leaves the major alternatives of reducing the animal units to reduce the amount of manure or disposing of part of the manure in another way, like transporting it to land that isn't being overloaded

Everyone in ag shudders at the thought of reducing animal units The disruption in the ag economy of the area would make the recent Avian experience seem like a Sunday afternoon social

Besides, farmers can't shoulder the entire bill by reducing animal units when the blame for their increase must be shared by all of us -- government which encouraged expansion through support programs, agri-business including lenders and everyone who wants a cheap food policy

That leaves the option of disposing of part of the manure in another way, such as transporting it away Your guess at the cost of that to the taxpayer is as good as mine

In a nutshell, that's the nitty-gritty of the Bay Too simplified a summary -- a lot of people will say It probably is

But I think it's a lot more realistic than Pennsylvania's half-hearted attempt at setting aside a million dollars for some more Better Management Practices -- the actual worth of some of which are being questioned

To Utilize Corn Stalks

Corn producers who are not making the crop into silage might consider making the corn stalks into bedding materials. The market value of all livestock bedding is quite high, and can be used on the farm or sold to others. After the corn is picked and the stalks dry, the corn can be shredded and baled.

This material makes very good bedding for box stalls and feedlot pens; the fodder absorbs water rapidly and when shredded gives less trouble in mechanical handling. When used on the farm as bedding, it can still be returned to the soil as added organic matter.

To Store Corn Carefully

Corn harvested for grain is a very important crop for most farmers. Therefore, good corn storage is very important. It should be protected from the weather, given proper ventilation for drying, and then protected from rodents. This latter menace is one that needs more attention on many farms. Mice and rats like to make their homes in corn cribs and storage places when given the chance. Make an effort to eliminate all nesting places and practice good sanitation to keep the population down. All rat baiting stations should be located where children and pets cannot come in contact with the bait.

Rats and mice are destructive and are costing farmers a great deal of money.

To Practice Good Public Relations

Farmers should be concerned about their image in the community. In most cases it is very good, and also the majority of non-farm people in the rural areas respect the needs and problems of the farmer. The image can be improved by getting better acquainted with your non-farm neighbors.

We urge farmers to invite their nearby neighbors to see their farm operations. In many cases a better understanding of the various farm operations will eliminate disputes and hassles about noise and odors. Also, I would encourage farmers to become involved with community activities. You'll find that people that understand each other seldom have serious problems.

To Graze Cautiously

As we approach frost season, farmers pasturing cattle should be concerned about possible dangers of grazing frosted legumes. All of the permanent grasses such as bluegrass, orchardgrass or bromegrass can be safely grazed at any time of the year and this is also true of any of the small grain

THE MODEL
October 14, 1984

Background Scripture:
Philippians 2:1-18.
Devotional Reading:
Philippians 1:19-30.

Michael Jackson has dominated the newspapers again today. His concerts are sold-out and people are desperate to get their hands on those elusive tickets.

I have nothing against Michael Jackson — I don't know enough about him to make any kind of evaluation. My problem is not with Michael Jackson, but with society's response to him. There is something wrong when a mere entertainer can so affect a sizable segment of our society, when so many people look to him for their example of what they want to emulate.

FULL HOUSE

Apart from Michael Jackson, there are a few others who can command virtually a "full house" anywhere when they appear. Entertainers and athletic stars seem to be the persons our society most idolizes. Not even political leaders — at least not in this country — can command that kind of following.

My problem with this type of public response is that these people become the models for millions of people. People took at their lives — the glamour, the success, the popularity, the material abundance — and say, "Now that's living!"

But is it? If it is, then most of us will go through life without ever having chance at that kind of "living."

What we need in our world today is another kind of "model." If we can get people to idolize a radically different ' ' ' le, we can have a different world — a world in which spiritual values take precedence over material values, where peace is more likely than mutual annihilation, and where love can reign as God intended it.

THE FULL LIFE

The fact is, we do have such a model. Our problem is that we haven't really given him a chance.

It's not that we have been urged to do so. Paul, writing to the Philippians, "Have this mind among yourselves which you have in Christ Jesus..." (2:5).

Perhaps the problem is that we don't like the example he sets: he refused to claim his equality with God, he gave his life for others, actually taking upon himself the role of a servant. A life like that could only lead in one direction — to the cross.

And we don't want that, do we?

Yet, who can deny that, despite all of his humility, his self-giving and obedience, his death on a cross, Jesus achieved what is beyond that of anyone who takes the power and fame road:

Therefore God has highly exalted him and bestowed on him the name which is above every name, that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, in heaven and on earth. (2:9, 10).

He and he alone is the model our world needs to know what real "living" is all about.

3 firms vie for Pa. ag export award

HARRISBURG — Three top Pennsylvania companies have been nominated for the 1984 Governor's Export Award for Agriculture, according to State Agriculture Secretary Penrose Hallowell. The award will be presented Monday, Oct. 22, during the Pennsylvania International Trade Conference at the Hyatt Hotel in Pittsburgh.

The three firms vying for the award are International Agricultural Associates of Nazareth, Northampton County; Matson Wood Products of Brookville, Jefferson County; and Sire Power, Inc. of Tunkhannock, Wyoming County.

The Governor's Export Award recognizes Pennsylvania companies which have achieved excellence in international trade. Awards are made in three categories: agriculture, manufacturing and service.

"Exporting agricultural products has helped America become the largest producer of goods and services in the world. Agriculture, the number one industry in Pennsylvania and the nation, plays a key role in maintaining the country's leadership in international trade and commerce," Hallowell said.

The State Department of Agriculture encourages Pennsylvania agribusinesses to expand services into the international sector. The Governor's Export Award is one way to recognize those agribusinesses that have done so successfully.

International Agricutlural Associates derives 100 percent of its income from exported goods as it is organized exclusively to export a broad range of agricultural commodities. These commodities include feedstuffs and hay, vegetable and forage seeds, laboratory and pet food diets, agricultural chemicals, livestock equipment and supplies, as well as live cattle.

In 1983 the company had total sales of $647,500. The firm employs two people and reports that sales for the first quarter of 1984 were 30 percent greater than the same period in 1983.

Matson Wood Products, the hardwoods and lumber subsidiary of Matson Lumber Company, had sales of $12 million in 1983, and 59 percent of those sales were exported products. The firm's export sales have more than doubled in the last five years. Those increased sales meant 30 new jobs at Matson Wood Products.

Sire Power is an artificial insemination cooperative, one of the oldest animal breeding organizations in the world. In 1983, 24 percent of the firm's $6.3 million sales were of exported products. However, this figure accounts for 35 percent of the company's sales volume.

Sire Power reports it has entered a previously closed market, Canada. To do so, the company met strict health requirements imposed specifically by that market. The company exports to a variety of countries, including Canada, Chile, Mexico and Uruguay.

Pa. pigs sold to Bermuda

CAMP HILL — Pennsylvania Agricultural Cooperative Marketing Association (PACMA), the marketing cooperative of the Pennsylvania Farmers' Association, completed its first-ever export sale Thursday with the loading of 60 feeder pigs aboard a cargo ship in Port Elizabeth, N.J. for a three-day voyage to Bermuda.

PACMA president, S. Richard Moyer of Winfield, said, "The shipment is relatively small, but numbers are unimportant right now. What is significant, not only for PACMA but all Pennsylvania farmers, is that we've finally succeeded, after a lot of time and effort, in breaking ground in this area. We feel exports will give farmers expanded market opportunities. PACMA's first sale has been a learning experience. Now that we've been successful, we're looking forward to completing larger sales in the future involving a wide range of farm commodities."

PACMA arranged the sale by finding a supplier to fill an order received by INAGRA, Inc., an export company headquartered in Nazareth, Pa. The order, for what is believed to be the first feeder pig export to Bermuda, was placed by Raymond White, for use at the Horse and Buggy Restaurant on the island.

The pigs were supplied by John C. Wagner, a PACMA member and operator of White Oak Mills, Lancaster Couny. The shipment was made from the Genesis Farrowing Unit, an 800-sow operation near Carlisle.

PACMA is a farmer-owned and controlled cooperative which buys and sells feed, feed ingredients and livestock for members. It also provides other services including forward contracting, spent hen marketing and processing apple bargaining.

cover crops such as rye, what, or barley. All of these are not toxic when frozen and usually do not present any bloating problems However, the legumes such as clover and alfalfa should be grazed carefully. They are not toxic, after being frosted, but will cause severe bloating if consumed while the frost is on the leaves. Allow the frost to thaw, and the plants to dry off, before turning in the herd or flock.

Also, any of the sudan grasses or sorghum hybrids should not be grazed for at least a week after being frozen.

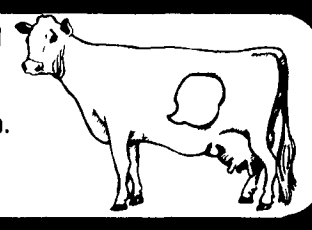
THE OLD WAY:

To treat herd excess acid problems with a single ingredient product that buffers only in the rumen.

Like taking just seltzer for an upset stomach.



YOUNG'S WAY:

To fight acid base imbalance with products that provide buffering action throughout the entire digestive system. Alka Culture® and Alka II™ buffer products increase dry matter intake and increases milk production.

Apple Market

Tuesday, October 9
Report supplied by PDA

Good Morning. The apple market this past week was somewhat sluggish. Demand is down and supply is up. Prices are remaining stable. A bright area is int he field of export sales, where many growers have been supplying a large order for Saudia Arabia. This activity is presently slowing down since much of the order has been filled. Apple shipments from the Carolina's appear to be coming to an end as their supplies get shorter. This could help Pennsylvania markets to improve.

We are in National Apple Month now, and the increased activities from the promotional people should be showing results soon. Brokers are reporting that orders should improve within two weeks or so as a result of the promotion being held now.

Farm tax relief passed

HARRISBURG — "Preserving the family farm in Pennsylvania is one of the most important jobs we have here in the legislature," state Sen. Noah W. Wenger, in announcing the passage of two bills he authored that would provide tax relief to family farms.

The legislation, Senate Bill 1005 and House Bill 1872, amended by Wenger in the Senate, would change the state's Tax Reform Code and the Local Tax Enabling Act, respectively. The changes would exempt family farms from having to pay a realty transfer tax when the farm is transferred from a sole proprietor family member to a family farm corporation.

"Currently," Wenger noted, "the law requires a 2 percent state and local realty transfer tax be paid when an owner of a farm forms a family farm corporation."

To ensure that the legislation is used for the purpose intended, the senator said a requirement has been built in that specifically states that none of the family farm corporation's stock can be sold to a non-family member.

"If that ever happens within a period of ten years from the time the farm is incorporated, the tax exemption status is lost and the corporation will have to pay the transfer fee," reported Wenger.

According to Wenger, Senate Bill 1005, recently passed by the Senate, now goes to the House for further consideration. The local tax change legislation, amended into House Bill 1872, has passed both the Senate and the House and now awaits gubernatorial approval.

"I am confident," Wenger concluded, "that these bills will soon become law and that we will be able to offer the family farm a much deserved break in the payment of taxes.

"With such a vast quantity of food being produced on Pennsylvania's many family farms, it is essential that we in the legislature ensure their stability so that all residents of the Commonwealth can benefit from their future prosperity."

Committee urges action on foreign animal, poultry diseases

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The USDA Advisory Committee on Foreign Animal and Poultry Diseases has recommended the U.S. Department of Agriculture be given authority, in an extraordinary emergency, to enforce quarantines in multi-premise areas within states with disease outbreaks to contain their spread, according to C.W. McMillan, assistant secretary of agriculture for marketing and inspection services.

At present, federal quarantines may be enforced only on boundaries of single premises or at state borders.

The committee also recommended USDA be given additional authority for the safe disposal of carcasses in foreign disease emergencies. In addition, it recommended that pesticide treatment by required on aircraft arriving from countries with pests not present in the United States.

"Foreign diseases and pests present an extremely serious threat to U.S. livestock and poultry," said McMillan, who chairs the committee. "The department values the advice we get from this committee on how to keep out these diseases and pests or suppress and eradicate them if they enter the country."

McMillen said the need for a broad-based committee on foreign animal and poultry disease originated in the 1940's when the United States helped Mexico fight an outbreak of foot-and-mouth disease. Members represent a broad spectrum of livestock and poultry production and marketing interests, and disease specialties. The committee includes farmers, ranchers, veterinarians, industry leaders, and teachers and researchers in the animal health field.

Tulpehocken Young Farmers hold first meeting

BY ROBIN PHILLIPS
Staff Correspondent

BERNVILLE — An organizational meeting to begin a new Young Farmers chapter in the Tulpehocken district was held at the Tulpehocken High School in Bernville on Oct. 1.

Interest was high, as over 45 people attended the first meeting. Requested often in the past by area farmers as a source of continuing vo-ag education, the new chapter welcomes members from the Tulpehocken district, as well as the Schuylkill Valley and Hamburg districts.

On hand to assist in planning the charter was Leroy Geesaman, past president of the Pa. Young Farmers; Tom Zartman, current Young Farmers president; Ronald O'Neil, PYF treasurer; Ron Fidler, PYF regional vice president; and Harvey Smith, regional vo-ag advisor.

The charter officers elected were: president, Fred Bohn; president-elect, Harold Miller; treasurer, Curtis Phillipy; secretary, Clark Sattazahn; and public relations director, Nord Parkinson.

Regular meetings are scheduled for the first Monday of every month at 7:30 p.m. in the Tulpehocken High School library. New members are welcome, and anyone interested may contact one of the above officers.

Del., Md. lifts poultry bans

DOVER, Del. — The Delaware Department of Agriculture has lifted its ban on public auctioning of poultry in Delaware following the release of Virginia and Pennsylvnaia as avian influenza infected quarantine areas by the USDA.

Dr. Wesley Towers, Jr., Delaware State Veterinarian, says the efforts to keep avian influenza out of Delmarva's multi million dollar poultry industry were exceptional.

"There was great concern that the virus would spread to our region because of our short distance from other infected areas But because of cooperation from every sector of the community we were able to protect our poultry," he said.

"The Delmarva Poultry Industry is to be commended for making many sacrifices during the past year. Prevention was the only way to effectively fight AI and we were fortunate enough to be able to fight it," Towers said.

But industry officials say because the quarantine has been lifted is no reason to begin relaxing preventive measures.

With the pending start of the waterfowl season, a new introduction of AI remains a threat. Towers says poultry growers should continue their common sense precautions to prevent another problem.

Also, effective immediately, restriction imposed by the Maryland Department of Agriculture on the sale of poultry at auction markets and the congregations of birds of any species are rescinded. This announcement was made by State Veterinarian, Dr. John C. Shook.

School Food Week

HARRISBURG — Governor Dick Thornburgh has proclaimed the week of October 14-20 as Pennsylvania School Food Week, in cooperation with the Pennsylvania Departments of Agriculture and Education and the Pennsylvania School Food Service Association.

"Nutritious and well-balanced meals provide our children with the valuable fuel they need to meet the physical and mental challenges of each new day. It is also essential that children learn good eating habits in their formative years to prepare them for a life of good health and fitness," the governor said during signing ceremonies in the Capitol.

Following the governor's lead in emphasizing increased nutritional awareness, the Departments of Agriculture and Education and the Pennsylvania School Food Service Association have scheduled a special kickoff ceremony for 11:30 a.m., Oct. 16 at the Northside Elementary School, 411 Walnut street, Mechanicsburg.

State Education Secretary margaret A. Smith, Deputy Agriculture Secretary Michael McGovern and Robert Freiler, Regional Director, Special Nutrition Programs, USDA Mid-Atlantic Regional Office, and several state and local officials will be the featured guests.

"The main thrust of Pennsylvania School Food Week is to encourage awareness in our schools of the vast resources of nutritious-fresh and processed Pennsylvania agricultural products available to them," according to state Agriculture Secretary Penrose Hallowell.

As part of that thrust, the Agriculture and Education Departments are conducting a series of six workshops in several sponsoring school districts during the week. NSF to fund Cornell bee study

ITHACA, NY — The same transportation system that shrinks our world is threatening agriculture by distributing diseases and insect infestations around planet Earth at an alarming rate, says a Cornell University scientist.

"One example is bee mite infestations which are spreading around the globe at such a terrific rate that they are expected to infest all countries that have honey bees within a decade or two," says Cornell's Roger Morse, a bee expert.

The Asian bee mite (Varroa jacobsoni) is an example of how a mite can spread around the world. First discovered in 1904 in Indonesia, it was found in six nations, including Russia, Japan, and China in 1960. By 1970, 15 nations were infested, and by 1978, 32 nations, including countries in Europe, South America, and Africa, reported the pest.

Since then, the mite also has been found in Argentina, Bolivia, and 20 states in Brazil; the northern limits of its spread in South America are unknown. Fortunately, says Morse, none have been reported in North America.

To probe further into the nature of mites, the National Science Foundation (NSF) has awarded $85,000 to Cornell to study the biology and control of the Asian mite.

The acarine bee mite, another bee pest, is an example of how quickly a mite can spread. Detected in northern Mexico this past summer, it now has been found in five states — Texas, Louisiana, South Dakota, Florida, and New York — and Morse suspects it is probably elsewhere. He predicts it could affect up to about 5 percent of honey production.

The Asian bee mites, however, pose the greatest threat. They cripple hives by feeding on bee pupae, sucking blood from between adult bee segments, and by attacking drone bees that fertilizer queen bees.

By far, bees are the most important pollinator for plant crops. At least 50 crops in the U.S., occupying about 6 million acres, depend on insect pollination.

"In fact, almost one-third of our diet can be attributed to insect-pollinated plants," Morse points out. Animal and dairy products, for example, are derived from insect-pollinated legumes such as alfalfa and clover, and many fats and oils are from oilseeds that are dependent upon or benefit from insect pollination.

Morse predicts that the Asian bee mites probably will infest the U.S. within the next decade. "It's essential, therefore, that we learn how to live with these pests."

Johne's Update: Answers through research

Dairy Exclusive

Editor's note: Johne's disease is of growing concern to more and more dairy farmers, and is the subject of much recent research. This is the conclusion of a two-part article about research progress and current knowledge about Johne's.

BY WENDY WEHR

NEW BOLTON CENTER—Phase two of the Johne's research project, which is being conducted by the University of Pennsylvania School of Veterinary Medicine and Penn State, with funding from the Pa. Department of Agriculture, is to complete herd studies of 24 Pennsylvania dairy herds. As with phase one of the project, the objective is to collect as much data as possible, to establish a base of information that might give some clues to solving the Johne's problem.

The 24 herds, all on the DHIA program, are a stratified random sample of the dairy herds in Pennsylvania. They are distributed geographically across the state, and represent all sizes of herds. Animals in these herds may or may not be carrying the paratuberculosis organism that causes Johne's. That's one part of the testing in the herd studies.

Dr Robert Whitlock, coordinator of the project, and his fellow researchers recently completed the sixth herd study. The first herd study was done in July. Whitlock explained that it takes five or six people a full day on each farm to gather all the information they think might pertain to Johne's.

"In each of the 24 herds, every animal from six months of age and up is tested for Johne's," said Whitlock. In addition, each animal is classified according to body condition, and information is gathered about her breeding records, lifetime production, health, and feeding programs. The DHIA records enables them to gather much of this related information.

Management practices are also noted because this may give the researchers clues about the spread of the disease between animals in the herd. Because most animals that contract Johne's are infected at a very young age, calf housing and contact between young stock and cows is of particular concern. Knowing whether the dairyman raises his own replacements or does a lot of buying and selling of cattle might also indicate how the disease spreads.

One of the questions that the researchers are particularly curious about, said Whitlock, is at what age an infected calf will show positive on the diagnostic tests.

Collecting soils samples on the farms, another part of the herd studies, may shed some light on how long the paratuberculosis organism lives outside of an infected animal.

Johne's positive

Of course all of the information that is gathered in the herd studies will be valuable to the Johne's research. Important answers to the questions about economic consequences of both the subclinical and clinical occurrence of Johne's may be found.

But what about the animals that test Johne's positive during the herd studies?

Any animal that is found to have Johne's in Pennsylvania must be reported to the Bureau of Animal Industry. As long as she remains in the herd, the dairyman cannot obtain certain health charts, so there is little choice but to cull the animal.

The BAI does pay an indemnity under certain conditions to dairymen who lose animals to Johne's. Whitlock explained, "The state will pay 90 percent of the appraised value of the cow, less the meat value when the cow is culled, if the dairyman agrees to continue cooperating by testing for Johne's at regular intervals and culling any additional animals that test Johne's positive."

"Several hundred farmers have taken advantage of the indemnity program to date," says Whitlock, "and as far as I know Pennsylvania is the only state that has initiated such a program."

But the indemnity program hardly covers the threat of Johne's for some diarymen. Whitlock explained why a few of the dairymen contacted for herd studies refused to become part of the research.

"If you've got an extremely valuable animal, or a registered herd with terrific genetic potential, finding Johne's in the herd would be really unfortunate."

Interestingly, there are a few options, with considerable drawbacks, that owners of particularly valuable cows can choose.

One option is the Johne's vaccine, which is only available on a strictly controlled basis. Five or six years ago the vaccine was used experimentally in three or four herds, and four new herds have been approved for its use recently, commented Whitlock.

But the drawbacks of the vaccine are many. Calves must be vaccinated before 35 days of age, and often a large lump occurs at the site of the injection. And although this vaccine may prevent the clinical disease, it is not known whether it prevents infection.

"Furthermore," says Whitlock, "use of the vaccine means that the herd is then Johne's infected." Even so, some dairymen would prefer to buy a vaccinated animal.

Another even lesser known option for valuable Johne's infected cows is an experimental treatment. Whitlock mentioned its successful use recently on an animal that was worth at least $200,000. The only reason to use it is if a cow has terrific genetic potential, because once she receives the treatment the cow may never be used for milk or meat again.

"The treatment is a drug called Lamprene, which is actually used as a treatment for human leprosy in other countries, but it is so rare and unusual that for all uses in the United States it is only used experimentally.

Lamprene does not cure Johne's, it merely arrests it. Three cows that received the treatment did respond, but they continued to shed the paratuberculosis organism. Several embryos were obtained from the valuable cow mentioned above, before she had to be destroyed.

Managing Johne's

Obviously the vaccine and treatment are of very limited use to most dairymen. But until the results of the three-year Johne's research project begin to yield some solutions, what can dairymen do about Johne's?

Henry Gruber, Pork i

BY JACK HUBLEY

NEW TRIPOLI — It's been a long market hog show. The best part of three hours. Inside the showring a handful of nervous sweaty-palmed 4-H'ers prod their class winners in anticipation of the announcement.

Wading amid the sea of pork is a bull of a man who selects his champion and reserve with the practiced eye born of years spent in showrings throughout the East and Midwest.

Following a few comments on the importance of a strong youth livestock program, the judge goes public with his decision, adding, "In my opinion this is the kind of a pig the industry's looking for."

And after spending a few minutes with Henry Gruber at the show's conclusion, it becomes obvious that this is the kind of man that the industry is looking for. In fact, Gruber's commitment to the livestock industry is as capacious as the man himself.

Gruber cultivated a love for the swine business early in life, growing up on the family potato and beef farm six miles from New Tripoli in Lehigh County. "When I was six years old my grandfather bought me a Poland China gilt, and that was my first endeavor in the hog business," he recalls. Evidently Henry's first pig made quite an impression.

In 1957 Gruber graduated from Penn State, and with animal husbandry degree in hand, went to work for A&B Packing of Allentown the following year. Starting as a buyer, Henry rose through the company ranks to become head buyer as well as chief of the livestock services and farm divisions. But a happy ending was not to come to pass.

A&B first began running into financial problems during the mid-1970's as a result of the so-called Prompt Payment Law that required farmers selling their livestock to be paid by the close of the next business day.

"There's nothing at all wrong with that," emphasizes Gruber, "but the problem was that the packer couldn't require the same thing from the chain stores." With money going out faster than it was coming in, packing houses were forced to increase their credit lines, a strategy that only compounded their problems.

Adding to A&B's financial headaches was the company's inability to keep pace with wage hike demands in a traditionally low profit margin industry. The Prompt Payment Law, when combined with escalating wages and a lack of capital needed for updating equipment, created a financial burden too heavy for many packing houses to bear. And on May 3, of this year, A&B packing became one of those casualties.

But even if one of the state's largest packing firms had taken a one-two punch, it wasn't down for the count. It wasn't long before PACMA, the marketing wing of the Pa. Farmers Association, approached Gruber about a restart and the wheels were in motion.

At this point, an offer has been submitted to A&B's owners from the newly formed producer co-op, and according to Gruber, a spring, 1985 start-up is a possibility. He does admit, though, that forming a corporation may be necessary, since it seems unlikely that enough farmer support will be enlisted to preserve co-op status.

"We do feel that there has to be some employee incentive, so we'll use a profit sharing structure," says Henry, vowing to give all employees a stake in their company.

"My concern is for the industry," Gruber emphasizes, "and right now the industry is in need of all the buying power it can get. Not only Pennsylvania, but the entire East is in real trouble as a result of the reduction in packing facilities."

One of the reasons that Gruber is working so hard to revitalize the derailed plant is the availability of water and sewage in Allentown.

"Water to the packing plant is like gasoline to an engine," Gruber asserts, adding that tighter environmental controls have made it virtually impossible to build new packing facilities in many parts of the East where the need may be greatest.

And with the restart of A&B on the horizon, Gruber hopes that his purebred Hampshire and Yorkshire operation, located 13 miles northwest of Allentown in the wavy Lehigh County hill country, will help to meet the demand for more pork products.

"The purebred industry has hurt itself in the last four or five years with a trend toward growthiness and production that has resulted in a slip in quality for the consumer," Henry says. Though Gruber feels that the ideal reproductive unit is the crossbred sow, he is confident that her value is greatly enhanced through crossing with a purebred boar.

"I think there's a great need for quality purebred boars in the industry," Gruber says.

If that be the case, then the Gruber's new farrowing and nursery facility may be just what the industry needs.

Designed with input from Penn State extension engineer Dan Myers, and swine consultant Matt Parsons, the new building incorporates plenty of state-of-the-art innovations including geothermal heating and cooling, wide-trough manure gutters, and a roofed manure pit designed to reduce odor and promote bacterial

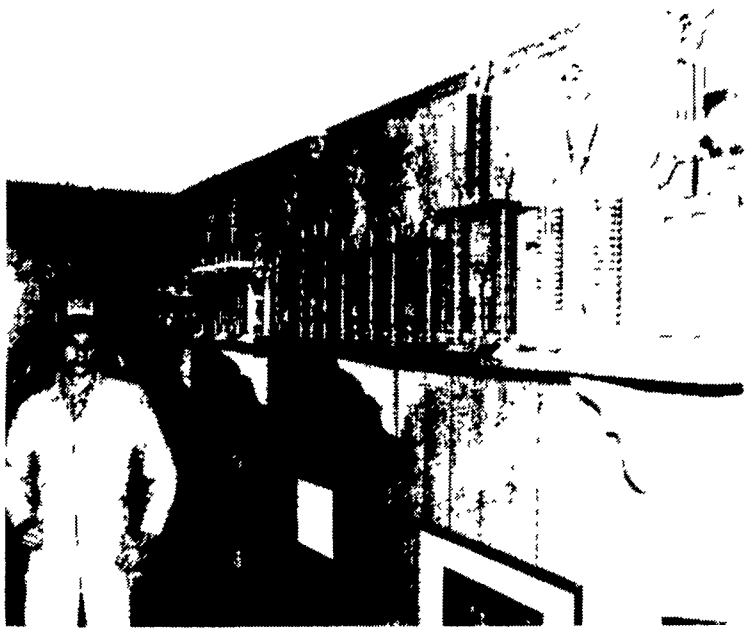
Purebred boar goal

With the help of his 60-sow herd, Gruber plans to supply the industry with high quality purebred boars. Hampshire sow named Betsy was top-selling gilt at Ohio's Andrews and Baughn sale. York seedstock comes from Daryl Sheiss and Penn State boar.

Pork — a family affair

Pork production at the Gruber farm is a family affair involving Henry, his wife Marsha, and 16-year-old son Seth.

Seth in trophy room



With good coaching from home, Seth is off to a running start on the swine show circuit.

Geothermal climate control system

A total of six underground tubes (like the three shown) provide geothermal heating in winter and cooling in summer. Installed at a depth of seven feet, the six 166-foot tubes deliver 50° air in winter, and 70° air in summer to the new farrowing and nursery building in the background. Gas provides supplemental heating in winter.

Snout coolers installed

Snout coolers keep sows cool and content during summer months. Comfortable sows have better appetites, produce more milk and faster gaining pigs, says Gruber.

dustry's 'friend in Pa.'

breakdown.

Another innovation that Gruber feels certain will boost his production is snout cooling. During the hot summer months, pipes channel geothermally cooled air to the front of each of the 20 new farrowing crates. Though the temperature in the rear portion of the crate may be between 80° and 90°, air temperature at the sow's head remains at 70° or less. Since going to snout cooling, Gruber claims a 20-percent increase in feed consumption, with some sows eating as much as 18 pounds per day even in the heat of summer. He feels that his sows' hearty appetites result in more milk for the growing broods.

Future plans at the Gruber farm call for a gestation building for his 60 sows, as well as a boar test station.

"The purebred breeder of tomorrow is going to have to provide commercial producers with a lot of information in terms of health, weight gain information, and loin eye and backfat thickness," Gruber predicts, adding that we've only begun to explore "the tip of the iceberg" with regard to swine production technology.

"Within the near future we'll be developing embryos in incubators. Genetic engineering has only begun and we're very close to being able to sex animals," Henry points out, adding that he doesn't know whether or not animal production is headed in the right direction.

"It used to be that one of the few ways for young people to get started in agriculture was through the hog business," says Gruber. But with recent developments in genetics, pharmaceuticals and building technology ushering in the age of the mega-producer, Gruber fears for the future of the small pork producer.

Though thinking big may pave the way to big profits, Gruber is confident that operations housing thousands of sows entail an equal proportion of risk with respect to disease. Such an operation would give him "too many sleepless nights" to make the business worthwhile.

Nevertheless, Gruber feels that the large "swine factory" confinement operations are here to stay, and will be one of the challenges faced by young aspiring hog producers such as his 16-year-old son Seth, a Lehigh County 4-H Swine Club member and partner in the family operation.

Off to a running start in the swine show circuit, Seth showed his first Pa. Farm Show grand champion swine in 1977 at the age of nine, and duplicated the feat the following year.

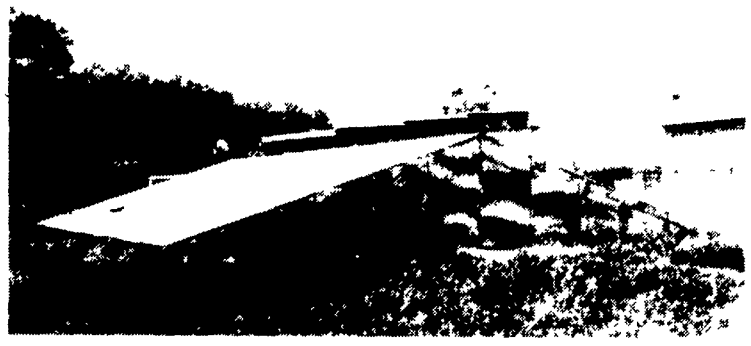
Plenty of encouragement on the home front has also assisted Seth in raising four county swine champions and exhibiting the lightweight champion steer at the 1980 Farm Show.

"One of the most pleasing experiences in our lives has been watching our son grow through the 4-H program," says his mother, Marsha, the Gruber family's chief advocate, who also handles all requisite business paperwork, as well as the pigs, themselves, on occasion.

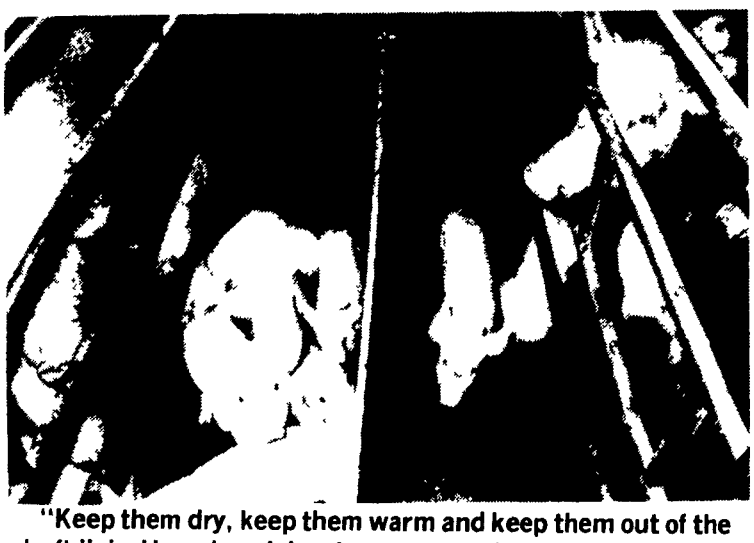
Seth's future plans include college—hopefully in the field of animal production—and then a career in swine production at home with his partner-father.

It's a good industry,"Henry concludes, "and it's important that we keep it here in the East where it belongs: close to our markets."

And from the farrowing house to the packing plant, Henry Gruber is determined to do his part to keep it here.



This 200-day capacity manure pit is covered with transparent fiberglass. The result is less odor and increased bacterial breakdown in the top two feet of sludge.



"Keep them dry, keep them warm and keep them out of the draft," is Henry's advice for successful farrowing. Coated wire farrowing crate floors are equipped with heated mats in new facility.

Hostetter dairy: Conservation pays in many ways

Dairy Exclusive

BY WENDY WEHR

MCVEYTOWN—James Hostetter is a dairy farmer who believes in conservation. He and his wife Patricia have just won a national soil and water conservation award for their outstanding conservation practices. But in other aspects of his dairy operation he also practices conservation, conservation of time and labor for one, and of precious capital inputs for another.

But don't get the wrong idea — practicing conservation and being conservative aren't necessarily the same thing. Hostetter has made his share of innovative changes in his dairy operation over the years as well.

Hostetter has 47 milking head of registered Holsteins on his farm, which is nestled between the ridges of Mifflin County west of Lewistown. His son Gregory is part of the operation these days, too, but while his son and daughter were growing up and in college, James Hostetter set up an efficient one-man dairy operation.

Hostetter has been dairy farming for 20 years. But his involvement in the dairy industry began before that, as a DHIA milk tester in Mifflin County for 12 years and also as a handler of Chore-Boy milking equipment.

Although during those 12 years he knew he wanted to have his own dairy operation, Hostetter waited for the right opportunity to purchase a place and get started with his own herd.

The previous owner of the Hostetter farm had milked some Guernseys, so the first order of business after puchasing the place was to do some remodeling, such as improving and increasing the size of the stanchions in the barn for the Holsteins and building a new milkhouse.

James and Patricia

James and Patricia Hostetter, Mifflin County dairy couple and finalists in the National Soil and Water Conservation Awards program.

no-till planter

James Hostetter believes planting no-till is a good conservation meaure. He purchased this no-till seeder last spring and was pleased with his stand of no-till alfalfa.

"At that time I could have spent $40,000 to $50,000 on a milking parlor," says Hostetter, "but instead I invested around $3,000 on improving what was already here."

Hostetter is sold on the practicality and efficiency of flat milking barns, although he admits that all the stooping during milking does bother some people.

For Hostetter the beauty of his set-up is that it is all on one level and all under roof, making chore time more pleasant and easier for one person. With stanchions for milking on part of the lower level of the bank barn, the surrounding barnyard and other buildings are used for free-stall housing for the different groups of cattle.

When calves reach two months of age they enter their first pen and then are graduated through three different free-stall areas. Hostetter has an excellent record for growing replacements.

"We rarely lose any calves," he noted, "I really can't remember the last time we lost a heifer here."

It was nearly 10 years ago that the Hostetters set up separate housing for the dry cows, a real improvement in the free-stall operation.

"We had had our dry cows in with the others," he explained, "but they were really eating too much silage and getting too fat. And then we were having problems with displaced stomachs."

To get the dry cows away from the free-choice silage bunk, they built 10 stalls and two box stalls away from the other cows.

"When I walk out here each morning and evening, I can easily look over the dry cows and see if any are ready to freshen and then put them in the box stalls," describes Hostetter. Since that improvement there has been a real savings in feed and the dry cows are in much better condition as they begin their next lactation.

All in all, the Hostetter operation is a step saver, easily managed by one person. Hayfeeding, for instance, was streamlined with the introduction of the big round bales. Hostetter only needs to put out a round bale once a week for the cows.

The Hostetter herd has a rolling herd average of a little over 18,000 lbs. milk and 720 lbs. fat with a four percent test.

Although sound management practices in a number of areas contribute to the above average production records, a definite boost to production was James Hostetter's decision to participate in the mobile near-infrared analysis program of Penn State.

Dry cow housing

The separate dry cow housing includes free-stalls and useful box stalls for just-fresh cows and heifers.

In an effort to make the lastest technology in feed and forage analysis available to the farmers, Penn State began a pilot project over a year ago in which the computers and analysis equipment are all in a van that goes out to the farms. On-the-spot feed testing is completed and ration programs developed.

"Since we started on the program about a year and a half ago, our rolling herd average has increased steadily every month," states Hostetter.

The mobile testing unit comes to the farm once a month to test the forage, hay, silage, and grain mix, explains Hostetter. The tests produce same-day results, analyzing what the farmer is feeding now and then suggesting a feeding program for the next month. This contrasts to other feed analyses that may have as long as a three-week delay before the farmer obtains any results or recommendations.

The success of the first year of the program led to a continuation of the project on a fee-schedule that is set up to pay its own way. Hostetter still thinks its economical and is sold on the benefit of the program.

"For instance, last month they recommended that I drop the protein down to 11 percent. Normally, I would have said that's not enough and kept right on feeding 14 or 15 percent. But I reduced the protein, saved on feed costs, and our milk production still increased. The testing program gives you confidence to make changes."

Usually the Hostetters raise all the alfalfa and corn that they need for the cows, and have some left to sell. They farm about 180 acres, 100 owned and 80 acres of nearby rented land. Even after last year's poor growing season, they had enough roughage and nearly enough corn, says Hostetter.

And that's one reason they decided not to participate in the milk diversion program. "We did think strongly about participating, because everyone needs to help get production in line with demand,

One pass proves you can't beat T1100.

You worked and waited all season for this moment. But it's finally time. And before you finish your first pass through that fine stand of T1100, you'll be calling for the grain truck.

You've already seen how it yields. Not just on paper. But right here, where all those extra bushels really mean something. So, line up your combine, and let 'er go. With T1100, that first pass says it all.

This fire company promotes milk, too

BY ROBIN PHILLIPS
Staff Correspondent

DILLSBURG — There's a fire company in York County that not only tells you to be careful with matches, kerosene heaters and fireplaces, but also to drink lots of milk and eat lots of cheese and ice cream.

This milk-promoting fire company is Dillsburg Citizens Hose Company No. 1.

In league with the Dillsburg Community Fair Association, the firemen are finalizing plans for the annual Farmers Fair Thursday through Saturday, which will be loaded with ag events and milk promotion.

There will be produce exhibits, FFA demonstrations and educational presentations from the state's six dairy breed organizations. Cows and calves will be on hand; milking contests will be held and dairy princesses will reign over the annual parade.

Jetshakes will be available from the Hi-Protein Breeders of Southeastern Pennsylvania, along with Jersey Jack cheese of the Pa. Jersey Cattle Club, folk art weather vanes with three different breeds of cows and plenty of free milk.

"Our farmers support us and we do this to show our appreciation," explains Bunky Smith, of the Citizens Hose Company No. 1. He is coordinator of many of the dairy exhibits and has rallied the support of the breed associations for the fair.

More than 700 small children from local schools will get the chance to hear and question Ruth Ann John, Ginger Myers and Joan Cope of the Pa. Guernsey Breeders Assn. They will speak on nutrition and demonstrate cow milking. Harrisburg Dairies will give out free glasses of milk.

Along with the promotional efforts by the breed associations, cow cookie jars will be raffled off and "cow" folk art will be displayed.

Available will be weather vane centerpieces depicting either Holstein, Jersey or Guernsey cows. Orders for them are being taken by the Citizens Hose Co. No. 1, 105 S. Baltimore St., Dillsburg, 17019. They are priced at $9.50 plus $2.00 for mailing and handling.

Last year, some 25,000 people lined the streets of Dillsburg for the parade, which is scheduled at 8 p.m. next Saturday.

So, as they raise funds for new equipment and ambulance training, the firemen of Dillsburg, York County, also promote dairy in particular and ag in general.

They deserve a toast.

Milk, of course,

Dillsburg Fire Chief "Wally" Foreman helps promote milk and says it's a way to thank farmers for their support.

Folk art cow weather vane centerpieces for Holstein, Jersey or Guernsey breeders will be available at the Dillsburg Farmers Fair Thursday through next Saturday in York County.

Manheim winds up local fair season

champion, the Brubakers took first place ribbons in most of the cow and group classes. They don't do much other showing, but being from Manheim, they like to support the local fair.

The reserve grand champion Holstein was shown by another Manheim couple, Darryl and Ruby Bollinger. The judge selected their aged cow, El-Lyndo Elevation Ladybug, as the reserve champ. They also were pleased to finally show a champion after a number of years at the fair.

"I guess it is a good day," said Ruby, "We had a heifer calf at home and we took reserve champion at the fair."

They wouldn't mind a few more heifers out of Ladybug — the 10-year-old has only dropped two heifer calves so far. But she is a good producer, with a 21,000 pound record on her last lactation. She's milking 98 pounds a day now, and still getting better.

The junior champion Holstein, the first place intermediate yearling heifer, was shown by an Ephrata student, Jim Zimmerman, from the Ephrata Cloister FFA Chapter. The intermediate yearling, Zim-Ridge Hollow Rocket Grace, has earned championships for Zimmerman before, at the Ephrata Fair and the Kutztown regional show. She was also first in her class at the state championship Holstein show.

The judge admired Grace's strength and dairyness. Apparently he also liked Zimmerman's showing and fitting skills. The Ephrata FFA'er also earned the champion showman award and the senior division fitting title.

The junior division showing award went to Michelle Kerdeman, who exhibited the junior and reserve grand champion Ayrshire. A 4-H'er from Manheim, Michelle is the daughter of Jules and Barbara Kerdeman. She also showed the reserve grand champion Ayrshire at last year's Manheim Farm Show.

Grand champion Ayrshire was Champs Yardley of Penn-Bell, the junior two-year-old of Ronald Groff, another junior exhibitor. Ronald is the son of Robert and Esther Groff of Ephrata.

Competition in the other colored breeds was really slim, with only one entry each of Jerseys and Brown Swiss.

The junior champion Jersey was a calf shown by 4-H'er Robert Fox. The Brown Swiss entry of Daniel Martin also earned a junior champion title.

4-H entries top Manheim Baby Beef Show

BY JACK HUBLEY

MANHEIM — After showing 4-H project steers for five years, John Kettering of Manheim went all the way to the top at the Manheim Community Farm Show's Baby Beef show on Tuesday evening.

"Everybody told me I had a good steer, and he had a chance, but I didn't really expect to win," said the 14-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. James Kettering, after his 1,075-pound middleweight 4-H champion was named number-one over all 24 FFA and 4-H entries.

A purebred Angus, Eberly's steer was chosen by his father and Glenn Eberly from Eberly's Elizabethtown herd.

Next stop for the Centerville Junior High School student will be the county roundup, and then, hopefully, on to the Farm Show.

The year was 1964 when a young Lititz 4-H'er by the name of Barry Longenecker exhibited the champion steer at the Manheim Farm Show. And now, 20 years later, Longenecker's son, Jeremy, continued a family tradition by taking reserve champion honors in both the 4-H show and the overall event.

In his first year of competition, the Manheim Christian Day School fourth grader was also the event's top junior showman.

And as a full brother to last year's FFA champion, Longenecker's steer, named Benji, upheld a livestock "family" tradition, as well. Purchased from Jim Foreman of Hershey, the 1,075-pound Angus-Chianina cross began his own winning tradition earlier this year by being named first in his class at the Northeastern Region Chianina Field Day.

At the other end of his show career, was veteran showman Barry Geib, who had his 1,265-pound Angus Chianina cross steer at "just the right finish" to catch judge Steve Upperman's eye.

This was Geib's fifth time in the winner's circle as the exhibitor of Manheim's champion FFA steer. In his final year of competition, the 21-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Geib of Manheim, has logged a combined total of 16 years of 4-H and FFA participation.

A second 1,265-pound Angus-Chianina steer was tapped for the reserve FFA position, as well. This one was shown by Darvin Myer, son of Mr. and Mrs. Gerald Myer of Manheim.

Following are the show results:

John Kettering chalked up his first Manheim grand champion win on Tuesday night with this purebred Angus.

Jeremy Longenecker and "Benji" teamed up to take reserve grand champion honors and first place in junior showmanship.

Geib & gilt come in under wire

BY DICK ANGLESTEIN

MANHEIM — Barry Geib and his coal-black gilt both came in just under the wire at the Manheim Fair.

For Geib, of R4 Manheim, it was his last show in junior competition as a 21-year-old FFA'er. A multiple winner in steer competition, Geib had never come close to a grand championship in the hog arena.

And his 250-lb. gilt just made weight in the final class of the heavyweight competition. A pound more and she would have been out of contention.

Last weekend, Geib was washing his steer for competition and the gilt jumped out of her pen. The extra running and exercise before she was rounded up may have taken off just enough that she made weight for the Fair.

"That may just have done it," Geib remarked after the shining ebony gilt was named grand champion Monday night by judge Mark Nestleroth, hog breeder from R5 Manheim.

"She caught my eye as soon as she came into the ring," Nestleroth said. "She's well-muscled, yet moves so easily."

Her coal-black bristles gleamed even in the fading light of the overcast evening.

The grand champion's ancestry will have to remain anonymous. Geib remembers buying her in a batch of feeders at Lancaster Stockyards and thinks she may have come out of Western Pa. Geib feeds out about 300 hogs a year – a project he began as an FFA'er.

And the gleaming gilt will come in handy as Geib winds up his active FFA years. Former chapter and state officer, Geib will be traveling to National Convention next month to receive his American Degree. And the gilt will help to pay the way.

Reserve grand championship went to another heavyweight shown by 17-year-old Chris Chapman, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Chapman, R5 Manheim.

Manheim Fair's reserve grand champion market hog is exhibited by Chris Chapman, of R5 Manheim.

monitoring wells in Northeastern Lancaster County for two years, explained that "slugs" of nitrates have been found to move down into wells initially within three days of a heavy rainfall after manure applications.

Also, there is a slower movement of nitrates that occurs after about two weeks. Nearby wells also vary according to the lag time for movement of nitrates depending on the type of soil.

Young, of the Economic Research Service, also has done some studies of the economic feasibility of reducing nutrients.

He has concluded that nutrients can be reduced about 10 percent at a minimum cost to the farmer through changes in cropping practices.

He went on to study reducing nutrients on a farm by 30 percent by transporting excess manure to a place outside the Conestoga Headwaters area.

To reduce nutrients by 30 percent by transporting excess manure would cost the dairy farmer in his study some 20 percent of his annual net income.

Young summed up his presentation on the economics of reducing nutrients with this statement:

"The solution could cost society hundreds of millions of dollars."

Warren Archibald, of the Lancaster County Soil Conservation Service, who has worked closely with farmers in the federally funded water cleanup pilot project study, gave a report on patrticipation thus far in various Better Management Practices in the Conestoga Headwaters area.

One interesting point he stressed is that about one-fourth of participation among the largely Amish and Mennonite farmers has been entirely at their own expense. These farmers have refused to sign contracts and have refused matching funds from the federal government to install any BMP's.

The top six BMP's installed to date and the percentages of completions of what is hoped to be done include:

Adopting no-till, 33 percent; stripcropping, 32 percent; waterways, 29 percent; minimum till, 27 percent; diversion systems, 24 percent; and terraces, 19 percent.

Among the lower types of participation he cited were contour farming and fencing off streams.

In addition to the nutrient pollution of water, the Northeastern Lancaster County study and its extensive monitoring system is also looking at the movement of herbicides, particularly the triazines, into the water supplies.

Among other speakers at the Thursday session were Eugene F. Thompson, chairman of the Pa. State Rural Clean Water Committee; Richard A. Pennay, of the ASCS, Harrisburg; Robert Gregory, of the Lancaster County Conservation District; Ray Brubaker, of the Lancaster County ASCS Office; and Dr. Dale Baker, of Penn State.

The day-long activities were concluded with a TV press conference and a visit to the study area.

Farmer Boy Ag crates reduce creep crushings because they are narrow at the top and wide at the botton. This design prevents the sow from turning and ensures that she takes extra care in rising and lying down. The full access, adjustable rear bumper gate allows easier entry or exit. Hostetter but we couldn't see where it fit for our operation," explains Hostetter. "You need a certain cash flow to keep operating, and when you're set up for a certain size you just have to stay at that level."

Hostetter does believe in full involvement in the dairy industry. And his participation in several cooperatives, such as Inter-State Milk Producers', Agway, and Sire Power, is evidence of that. He serves as president of the Lewistown local of Inter-State.

Inter-State has a quality premium program for clean milk, and because of his consistently low somatic cell count, Hostetter has missed the quality premium only once this year.

Hostetter feels his breeding program is not all that unique. "Like everybody, I'm breeding for better udders, and better feet and legs," he says. But he keeps an eye on test as well, to keep that herd average at or above four percent.

They've had a few excellent cows in the herd, and there are some very good animals milking well for them now. A few years ago they seemed to have a run on heifer calves and so the Hostetters were selling quite a bit of breeding stock. They've had heifers exported to Europe as well.

Along with good management of the cows goes good management of the soil. Building a manure pit about five years ago fit in with more than one of the Hostetter priorities – saving labor and saving the land and water.

"I figure I save at least an hour each day by not having to haul manure," says Hostetter. They clean out the solids from the pit twice a year, applying the manure to the fields at the time that it is best for the crops and the soil, and when there will be the least loss of nutrients in run-off.

When designing and building the manure storage facility, Hostetter chose to put a ten-by-ten picket dam in one corner. The liquid that collects in it, which has a lot of nutrients, is pumped out onto the pastures around the farm buildings. The dry cows have access to the most pasture, and Hostetter noted that the grass in the pastures has really been lush since they've had the manure pit.

Other conservation practices that Hostetter was cited for in the national soil and water conservation awards program were strip and contour farming, winter cover crops, diversion terraces, grass waterways, and tile drains. He believes no-till planting is a sound conservation measure, and he has been very pleased with the yields from his no-till corn and alfalfa.

Just last spring Hostetter purchased a no-till seeder, only the second one that he knows of in Mifflin County. The alfalfa that he sowed no-till gave him a better stand than that planted by conventional methods.

Hostetter also plants about three quarters of his corn no-till. He explained that he likes to double-crop, planting corn right in the alfalfa after taking off the first cutting. His yields in these corn fields have been really good.

"The way I see it," states Hostetter, "Farmers need to voluntarily conserve our resources before the regulations are passed, before you have to get a permit to even plow your fields."

And the other point that Hostetter makes is that conservation actually pays, such as in savings of fuel and fertilizer. When it comes down to it, run-off of fertilizers is a loss for everyone.

When asked whether he had a greater love for crop farming or dairying, Hostetter firmly replied that he was committed to both. "The whole thing is a challenge, and I like to make it go, to run a successful operation."

So with the proper mix of conservation and innovation in his dairy operation, Hostetter does "make it go," and he enjoys the challenge and responsibility of it all, too.

Milk dealers appeal for PMMB okay

HARRISBURG — The future of Pennsylvania's 50-year old Milk Marketing Law and the economic stability it provides for farmers and dairy employees depends on speedy action by the state's House of Representatives which will only be in session a few days before adjournment, according to the Pa. Assn. of Milk Dealers.

Under the new Sunset Law passed by the General Assembly a few years ago, the Milk Marketing Board and the law which regulates it are up for review. Unless legislation is passed the Board will go out of existence no later than next June.

The job of analyzing the Board's activity was first given to the Pennsylvania Senate's Committee on Agriculture and Rural Affairs early this year. It suggested a few minor amendments to update the law. This was contained in Senate Bill 1527 which then cleared the Senate by a 49 to 0 vote.

The bill then went to the House of Representatives where it was sent to the Appropriations Committee and it remained there as the legislature adjourned for an election recess. It will not return until Monday, Nov. 19.

Since this is Thanksgiving week there only will be a few days to work before it again recesses until Monday, Nov. 26. And this is the last day of the 1983-84 session since the Constitution mandates final adjournment Nov. 30. This also is the opening week of deer season which could have an effect on attendance.

If Senate Bill 1527 or some other legislation does not pass this could be disastrous to farmers and dealers alike and ultimately to consumers, according to Earl Fink, executive vice president of the Milk Dealers Association, Harrisburg.

Without Milk Marketing there would not be any bonding or Security Fund protection, he said, and this is vitally necessary.

"Milk dealers went on a financial limb to help pass newer and stronger bonding and Security Fund legislation," Fink added. "This will cost the Pennsylvania dealers hundreds of thousands of dollars, but they wanted to offer protection for their producers to guarantee an adequate supply of top-quality milk."

"If the legislation does not pass it also could be the finish for a number of small dealers as big operators, store chains and others start price wars. Temporarily, consumers might get a short break, but experience in other states indicates that when the small dealers are sent to the wall the prices go even higher than before. In addition, many jobs would be lost and markets for farmers would disappear."

Grange urges bill signing

HARRISBURG — The Pennsylvania State Grange is urging the Governor to sign a bill increasing fines for timber theft to deter the practice in rural areas.

H.B. 1980, on the Governor's desk, increases fines for convicted timber thieves to twice the determined value of the stolen timber. This new law was sought by the State Grange because of the high incidence of timber theft in the northern tier counties of the state. Timber thieves found that they could make out financially by stealing timber and paying the fine, which did not come close to the price of the timber. The legislation was introduced earlier this year by Rep. Roger Madigan (R-Bradford).

Other Grange supported bills passed by the Legislature right before the election recess include:

* S.B. 11, requiring school buses to stop at all railroad crossings;
* S.B. 1153, appropriating $35,000 to provide fencing materials to farmers to prevent wildlife crop damage;
* S.B. 1154, allowing farmers to hunt without license don owned or rented farmlands which do not adjoin the home farm within 10 air miles of the base farm;
* H.B. 163, exempting corn cribs and grin bins from real estate tax assessments.

Roshel Ayrshire dispersal

BY BARB RADER
Staff Correspondent

ALBION — Eighteen-year-old Lisa Coleman from Saltsburg, succeeded in placing the top bid of $1,925 at the Roshel Ayrshire herd dispersal, held last week in Albion.

Represented by her parents, H.D. and Pauline Coleman, Lisa purchased the high seller of the dispersal, Roshel Pride Winnie, a Mar-Ral Commander's Pride daughter.

Contending bidders for the 5-year-old Winnie were Eddie and Pauline McConnell of Wellington, Ohio.

Just fresh with a Royal Welcome bull calf, which was also purchased by Coleman, Winnie has two previous milk records well over 13,000 lbs. milk and 450 lbs. butterfat.

Six other herd mates of Winnie will also be joining Lisa's dozen other Ayrshires at the Coleman farm. Lisa is a 9-year veteran of 4-H and FFA, and is a senior at Apollo Ridge High School in Indiana County.

The Erie County Roshel farm of Robert and Elizabeth Dorchester provided quality Ayrshires, including some sired by Royal Welcome, Meredith Liberator, Royal Command, Mar-Ral Fickle's Boy, and Donholm Commander's Victory. A majority of the herd had traces of Wauwatosa's Commander's Laddie in their pedigrees.

Twenty-one head brought well over $1,000, with 24 cows averaging $1,190. The total sale average for 55 head was $800.

The second high seller was grand champion of this year's Crawford County Fair, Roshel Victory Eileen, sired by Donholm Commander's Victory. The six-year-old cow was purchased by John Hartman, Farmdale, Ohio, for $1,650.

The volume buyer was Uhl Ayrshire Dairy, St. Mary's, taking 13 head with over $10,000 value.

The Ayrshire sale was managed by Bob Dix, DeGraff, Ohio, and he commented, "The sale was better than any other sale around."

Martin's lamb is 'black magic' at Manheim

Judge Ken Brubaker named Lisa Martin's entry the grand champion of the Manheim Farm Show's overall market lamb show, adding that the black sheep was, "the best lamb I've seen all summer."

BY JACK HUBLEY

MANHEIM — "This is the best lamb I've seen all summer," was judge Ken Brubaker's summation as he dubbed Lisa Martin's 125-pound Hampshire-cross the grand champion of the Manheim Community Fair's market lamb show.

The Garden Spot High School junior was off to a fast start on Thursday night after placing first in the senior showmanship competition staged at the beginning of the show.

The daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Aaron Martin of New Holland, Martin demonstrated her faith in the black lamb from the beginning, by making it the high seller at Manheim's Supreme Club Lamb Sale in April. And the lamb, a half-brother to last year's Farm Show grand champion, didn't let her down. Named grand champion earlier this year at the Elizabethtown Fair, the fancy lamb was bred by Bill Wade of Virginia.

With a healthy turnout of 98 lambs, this year's show featured three breeding sheep classes, and a market lamb show split into two divisions: those lambs continuing on to other shows, and those to be sold at Manheim's livestock sale on Friday night.

Ellen Lewis' purebred Hampshire not only took top honors in the sale lamb division, but was also named reserve grand champion of the overall show.

After giving the nod to Martin's lamb as champion in the former division, Brubaker went to Ellen Lewis' purebred Hampshire for his champion in the sale division, as well as reserve grand champion of the overall show.

The Hempfield sophomore's winner was a homegrown 115-pound ewe sired by a ram owned by Clyde Brubaker of Lancaster.

The daughter of Mr.and Mrs. George Lewis made her mark at the show with two other entries as well, registering a second-place win in Hampshire breeding sheep competition, and winning her class in the lightweight market lamb division.

Reserve champion honors in market lambs not to be sold went to Elizabethtown's Tim Engle, exhibiting a homegrown 4-H project lamb co-owned by himself and brother Curt. The purebred Suffolk was also reserve champion at this year's Lampeter Fair.

The sons of Mr. and Mrs. Jerry Engle, the two brothers also went

Barns promote milk

(Turn to Page A39)

SYRACUSE, N.Y. -- A grass roots effort of milk promotion has been initiated in the states of New York and Pennsylvania. It makes use of one of farming's oldest and most familiar objects — the barn. Barn walls across the two states have gone beyond their usual storage responsibilities and into the advertising business, in the form of billboards.

The program was developed by the American Dairy Association and Dairy Council (ADA/DC) with the help of several of its 20,000 members. ADA/DC developed and produced billboards promoting the theme "Milk's Got More." In order to make them adaptable for barn display and insure a long life, they are made out of metal. The billboards are 12x20 feet in dimension, making them easily visible from 600 feet away.

As the signs were being developed, ADA/DC's staff scoured the countryside for some ideal barn locations. There were two major requirements; the barns had to be well maintained and they had to be located on a major interstate highway in a heavily populated area.

In their travels, ADA/DC's staff was able to come up with a number of barns and willing owners. By the year's end, ten signs will be installed in New York, with an additional ten installed in Pennsyvlania. The number of signs will increase as time and funding allows.

Eastern holds annual meeting

SYRACUSE — Eastern Milk Producers Cooperative Association, Inc. held its 62nd Annual Meeting Oct. 2 & 3 at the Hotel Syracuse, Syracuse, N.Y. More than 500 Eastern members and guests attended the two-day affair.

Delegates from Eastern's 140 local organizations met in policy sessions on Tuesday, Oct. 2. The delegate body is the major policy group of the organization, whose actions direct the cooperative board of directors and management. The delegates voted overwhelmingly to reaffirm the members' confidence in all Board action taken throughout the past year.

The Annual Meeting Banquet was held Tuesday evening. President Earl R. Forwood presided over the program, which included special recognition for retiring directors Stanley Korona and Noah Prior. Also honored at the banquet were Earl and Anna Mae Hensler, Eastern's "members of the year" and Tom Schwendler of the Syracuse Newspapers for his outstanding coverage of agricultural news. Distinguished guests included Commissioner of Agriculture Joseph Gerace, Pa. State Dairy Princess, Lynette Loper, and New York State Dairy Princess, Holly Smith. An enthusiastic and humorous presentation was made by banquet speaker Karl Kettering, president of Progress Through People, Inc., an organization specializing in human motivation. Guests also enjoyed the talents of the New York Troubadour, Robin Schade.

The Annual Meeting Wed. morning session began with committee reports, followed by officer reports and the addresses of President Forwood and General Manager, Michael Donovan.

The afternoon session included an update on the National Dairy Promotion and Research Board, given by Earl R. Forwood, member of the 36-person board; a presentation by the American Dairy Association on the history of dairy promotion; and a dairy situation update by Eastern Economist, Joseph C. Mathis.

The afternoon session was immediately followed by a reorganization meeting at which officers of the cooperative were elected. president Earl R. Forwood was re-elected by a solid margin, with Robert Hill elected as vice-president in place of the retiring Stanley Korona. Also re-elected to their positions were Secretary George Fuller, Treasurer George Stambaugh and Assistant Secretary-Treasurer Dan Fox, Ephrata. Elected to sit on the executive committee were R. LaVerne McCarty, Forksville, Leo Connor and C. Lee Greenwalt, Lawrenceville.

General Manager, Michael Donovan said this year's meeting reflected the very positive performance of the cooperative in the last 12 months, with attendance at the meeting indicative of the strong growth of member pride in their cooperative. Comments at the close of the two-day session suggested that this year's meeting was one of the finest ever held.

Eastern Milk Producers Cooperative Association, Inc. is the largest dairy cooperative in the Northeast, serving over 4200 dairy farmers throughout New York, Pennsylvania, Vermont, New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Maryland, Delaware, and New Jersey.

Order 4 milk price $15.42 for November

ALEXANDRIA, Va. — Middle Atlantic Order Market Administrator Joseph D. Shine announced a Class I milk price of $15.42 per hundredweight for November 1984. This price is up 34 cents from October and is 16 cents above last November's Class I price. This is the first month since November 1983 that the Class I price has been higher than the same month of the previous year.

Mr. Shine announced a Class II milk price of $12.72 per hundredweight for September 1984 and a butterfat differential of 18.2 cents for the month. The Class II price was up 30 cents from August while the butterfat differential increased by nine-tenths of a cent.

The November Class I price and the September Class II price are based on the September 1984 Minnesota-Wisconsin manufacturing milk price of $12.64 per hundredweight at a 3.5 percent butterfat content. The price increased 34 cents from the previous month and was a the highest level since April 1981, when it was also $12.64 per hundredweight.

The USDA reported that the wholesale price of Grade A butter at Chicago for September was $1.5812 per pound and the nonfat dry milk price was $.9068 per pound, f.o.b. plants in the Chicago area.

Garbage feeding explained

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Feeding garbage to swine has its benefits, but it also has its risks. The U.S. Department of Agriculture and its state counterparts are trying to minimize those risks.

According to Bert W. Hawkins, administrator of USDA's Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service, "garbage feeding" is more than recycling leftovers from restaurants and cafeterias. To the approximately 8,000 commercial feeders who use this practice, it also includes products like stale bread from bakeries, and heads, tails and other waste from fish processors.

"The benefits from recycling food waste through swine are obvious," said Hawkins. "Why waste food that's unsuitable for people to eat, but is suitable and nutritious for food-producing pigs?"

Nevertheless, he said, there is a continuing risk that disease organisms could be fed to swine along with the meat products in food waste, and controls are needed to prevent this.

The risk is more than theoretical, Hawkins said.

"Recently, USDA participated in an international task force to eradicate African swine fever from the Dominican Republic and Haiti," Hawkins said. "African swine fever is a foreign animal disease for which there is no treatment or vaccine. It doesn't affect humans, but it can kill up to 100 percent of infected animals.

"The eradication campaign took more than four years and cost $20 million. The outbreak in the Dominican Republic began when untreated airline garbage originating in foreign countries was fed to local swine."

Congress helped balance the benefit of waste prevention against the risks of disease transmission by passing the Swine Health Protection Act in October 1980. Under this law, USDA is authorized to establish a uniform system to regulate the treatment of food waste fed to swine. States with laws as strong as the federal statute, or stronger, may take the lead in enforcing the rules. Otherwise, federal inspectors take over the function of seeing that food waste is properly treated. States may also ban garbage feeding altogether, and 16 of them do.

"Most food waste feeders respect the trust placed in them. A few, however, still don't take feeding rules seriously," Hawkins said.

OCTOBER IS...

COOPERATIVE ENTERPRISE MONTH

"We Do Together What We Cannot Do Separately" ①

In proclaiming October as Cooperative Enterprise Month in Pennsylvania, Governor Thornburgh said, "I urge all citizens to recognize the benefits gained by belonging to cooperatives and to acknowledge the many contributions that these special institutions make to the economy and development of our state and nation."

"Pennsylvania cooperative organizations and institutions play an important part in meeting the needs of many of our citizens and in improving our communities."

"Cooperatives are among the leading business enterprises in the Commonwealth with more than three million owner members."

American agriculture has to stay on a sound financial footing. It makes national and international sense. Family farmers are the most productive segment of American agriculture, and cooperatives help to keep them in business.

The eight milk cooperatives serving the dairy farmers in Pennsylvania and neighboring states are proud to be a part of this great cooperative enterprise.

Johne's

Transmission of Johne's occurs primarily through the ingestion of manure from infected animals. The key is to remove infected animals from the herd, and keep manure away from the calves, the most susceptible animals.

What this means for dairymen is management changes. Dr. Sharon Harmon from the Animal Disease Laboratory at Penn State, another member of the Johnes' research team, has drawn up some management guidelines for controlling the spread of the disease.

Washing the dam's udder prior to calving and providing a separate calving area for each calf is a first step. Removing the calf from the cow immediately after calving and washing the cow's udder again before drawing the colostrum is another. And colostrum should not be pooled because that allows one contaminated sample to infect all the calves.

Separate housing for calves is especially important. Calves must be kept away from the manure of adult animals, whether it's along fences, on the boots of the dairyman, or in the bedding. That's how the paratuberculosis organism is transmitted.

Calves should be pastured in areas uncontaminated from the manure of adults. And contamination of feed and water should be avoided as well by using separate waterers for calves and adults.

All those suggestions are steps to protect calves from exposure to infected manure, but the other important step in eliminating Johne's is to cull infected adults.

The guidelines and management suggestions for handling Johne's are quite detailed. If you've had Johne's diagnosed in your herd, or suspect you have carriers, you should be working with your veterinarian.

You must take whatever appropriate steps you can now. In March or April when the researchers have some answers from their three-year project to the plaguing questions about the economic consequences of Johne's, they will be anxious to share their results with dairymen. As Dr. Whitlock said, this is all being undertaken for the benefit of the dairy industry.

Bill priority set by Grange

HARRISBURG — State Grange Master Charles Wismer announced the Grange's legislative priorities in the lame duck session of the State Legislature from Nov. 19 to November 30.

Topping the list, Wismer said, is a bill requiring poultry and egg producers to be paid for live poultry and eggs within 21 days of delivery to the buyer or processor. H.B. 2035, introduced by Rep. John Broujos (D-Adams) earlier in the year, must be approved by the Senate Agriculture Committee as well as the full Senate before the session ends.

Under the bill, a farmer could add interest onto the late payment after 21 days and put a first priority lien on any company-owned birds still in his possession. (Contract poultry farmers raise the chicks to maturity for a fee, but the birds are actually owned by the processor.) Under the legislation, farmers can sell the birds after meeting certain stipulations in the bill.

The poultry bill has been a priority project for the Grange. The rural farm organization has been fighting for poultry growers who contracted with the bankrupt Mandata Poultry plant in Northumberland, Pa. About 90 contract poultry growers never received up to 16 weeks in payment after the company declared bankruptcy last year. Farmers also have to bear housing, feed and utility costs to raise the chicks and depend on their pay checks to cover these expenses.

Other priority legislation sought by the Grange includes a bill prohibiting foreign investors in agriculture from obtaining low-interest Pennsylvania Industrial Development Authority (PIDA) loans to compete with our state's agricultural industry, and a bill providing protection to rural landowners who lease property for oil and gas drilling. The foreign investment bill, a house bill, is currently in the Senate Appropriations Committee and has a good chance at passage, according to Wismer. The oil and gas bill, S.B. 402, is in a House-Senate conference committee where the Grange will push for the committee to retain a section requiring a well operator to restore any water supply that may be diminished or contaminated.

The strongest opponent of all of these bills is the clock, Wismer said, as legislators are faced with many bills and only an estimated six days in which to act.

Other winners in the breeding sheep show included Michelle Mylin with both champion and reserve honors in Hampshire competition, and Arlisa Snavely, whose ewe lamb was the sole entry in the Shropshire show.

"This has to rank as one of the best Manheim sheep shows ever," Brubaker concluded, adding that the quality was "extremely deep in every class."

Lancaster County's Outstanding 4-H Boy and Girl share enthusiasm for program

Editor's Note: Sherry Goss, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Albert Goss, Pequea, and Greg Musser, son of Mr. and Mrs. Harold Musser, Elizabethtown, were chosen Lancaster County's Outstanding 4-H Girl and Boy at the annual Achievement Day held in August.

These active 4-H'ers have a lot in common, including an eight year 4-H tradition, with many, varied projects. Both high school seniors, and both 17 years old, Sherry and Greg are members of the National Honor Societies at their respective high schools and have been listed in the "Who's Who Among High School Students."

As 4-H week draws to a close, we are spotlighting these young people as they continue to speak out about 4-H and the benefits the program has to offer to young people throughout the nation.

Working with young children is one of Sherry's goals and she has gotten off to a good start by leading a 4-H babysitting project and babysitting for neighbors. Here she entertains from left: Joseph, Luke, Mark, and Andrew. The Hess children frequently enjoy Sherry's companionship.

Being Outstanding Girl is the 'ultimate' for Sherry Goss

BY SALLY BAIR
Staff Correspondent

PEQUEA - "It is the ultimate thing in 4-H," Sherry Goss says candidly, when asked her feelings about being named Outstanding 4-H Girl in Lancaster County.

Sherry, 17, has been a 4-H'er for eight years, and says that winning that award has been one of her goals since she attended the queen contests held before it was changed to an Outstanding Boy and Girl contest.

In fact, Sherry is carrying on a family tradition that began when her sister Pam, now 21, was named Lancaster County's 4-H Queen. Pam was the last one to be named queen before the new tradition began. While Pam was disappointed in dropping the queen contest, Sherry says, "I think it's neat that they got the guys involved."

For the Al Goss family, who live at R1 Pequea, 4-H has always been a family activity, with both parents and all three daughters involved in the Penn Willow Community Club. Sherry has a younger sister, Stacy, 13.

Sherry says, "Our family was always involved. I can remember going to Achievement Day before I was a member. I thought it was a really neat activity."

Sherry has taken a wide variety of projects, from backpacking, to cake decorating to wildlife, and has enjoyed using the skills she has learned. A teen leader for four years, she has helped with crafts and cooking and says, "Being a teen leader gave me a lot of responsibility. I liked working with the kids."

This year she was a teen leader for Extension Home Economist Michelle Rodgers in a countywide baby sitting project, something she especially enjoyed because her goal is to be an elementary school teacher. Sherry states, "I've always wanted to be a teacher, since I was little." Helping set up activities for a one-morning babysitting service was fun for her.

A regular participant in 4-H Fashion Review, this year Sherry was named an alternate winner. She says, "I think it's fun to be there and see what everyone has made. It's scary to model, but it's a nice experience. "This year she helped to narrate, which meant rewriting and coordinating the

Greg Musser is well-known for farmland speech

BY SALLY BAIR

ELIZABETHTOWN — Last year Greg Musser was disappointed that there were no applicants for the Outstanding 4-H Boy award. He decided to rectify the situation by applying for the award himself, and this year he is representing Lancaster County 4-H'ers as that Outstanding Boy.

Greg, 17, is a senior at Elizabethtown High School and a member of the Red Rose Beef Club and the Elizabethtown Pig and Rabbit Club. He had belonged to the Western Tractor Club, but has completed the four years of tractor work.

Greg is also active in the Future Farmers of America and may be best known around the county for his winning public speech on farmland preservation.

The speech won him recognition by the Agricultural Peserve Board and earned him one of the finalist slots in the state 4-H public speaking contest at Penn State in August. He has also attended Leadership Congress at Penn State.

Crediting 4-H with helping bring out his talents, Greg says, "It has helped me find out what I am interested in. I probably wouldn't be so interested in farming if it weren't for 4-H. 4-H has many opportunities for young people."

He also credits 4-H with teaching him responsibility, and says that a beef project must be given attention every morning and every night, and should be walked every day. "4-H is a really good

Keeping accurate project books is one important aspect of 4-H work. Here, Greg Musser tackles his beef project book at the kitchen table.

Sherry Goss, outstanding 4-H girl in Lancaster County, shows her cake decorating technique as she puts the finishing touches on her father's birthday cake.

A 4-H member for eight years, Greg has shown steers in the Red Rose Baby Beef Club for five years. He believes the beef project has helped him learn responsibility as he cares for the steer.

Greg Musser

program," he says. "I feel fortunate to live in a county where the quality is so good."

According to Greg, the most important thing he has gained in 4-H has been friendships with other 4-H'ers. "In 4-H the kids want to be there," he said. "They are there on a volunteer basis, and the quality of people is tremendous."

Not suprisingly, Greg likes the switch from a queen contest to an "outstanding" contest. "The queen may have had more glamor, but it represents 4-H more to have boys and girls competing. There is now more opportunity for young men to be in it."

Greg would like to make himself available to speak to 4-H clubs about the opportunities. "I want to talk about 4-H and its benefits. We must get kids to understand at a younger age that there are opportunities and benefits down the road and over the hill." Greg's father is a leader and his three younger siblings are also 4-H members.

Greg has shown a grand champion steer at the Elizabethtown Fair two years in a row, and has shown at Farm Show for three years. He says one reason 4-H'ers may leave is the pressure to make money, especially for college. "It's hard to make money on 4-H projects." he says candidly.

He believes the competition in the program is good. "You need to reward the person who is doing a good job. It helps the attitute of the 4-H'er. Competition is one of the most important parts of 4-H — it makes you work harder."

President of his FFA chapter, and treasurer of the Beef Club and the senior class at Elizabethtown High School, Greg has many activities to keep him busy. At this time of the year he is kept occupied on the soccer team, and he also plays on the baseball team. This month he was named Boy of the Month by the Elizabethtown Rotary Club."

Last year in high school Greg pursued the opportunity of taking a public speaking class at Elizabethtown College. This was helpful to him as he prepared for his speech on land preservation. He says that all the information he gathered to prepare his speech "helped me become more aware of the facts. When I see houses on prime farm land it makes me think more."

Because of his awareness, he is now serving as a member of the Agricultural Preserve Board. He is delighted with the opportunity, saying, "It is the most beneficial thing I have come upon. The Board is so educated. They know a lot about a lot of things. I learn so much. It's been slow, but we keep plugging away. We are starting to see some progress."

Another opportunity Greg had as a direct result of 4-H was working for Representative Kenneth Brandt as a summer intern. Greg met his local representative in Harrisburg when he attended 4-H Captitol Days, and in a thank you note to him suggested that he would like to work for the representative sometime. The result of that note was a project on farmland preservation which Greg prepared for him over the summer. "I learned more about the way the legislature works," Greg says. He added that he may investigate other internships in the future. Greg also works parttime at Messick's Farm Equipment.

Greg, whose parents raise steers and chickens on their northern Lancaster County farm, is still deciding on his future which will include college with a major in animal science or accounting. "A lot of things interest me," he says. His father pointed out that he recently presented a very good sermon at the Elizabethtown Brethren in Christ Church and Greg acknowledges that sometime in the future he could pursue that line.

No matter what he decides, he says, "I know my 4-H experiences will help me if I go to college. I know I can handle things, and meet people from across the state and make friends. I know that whatever I choose as a career, I can stand up and express myself."

According to Greg, the Outstanding 4-H Boy award, "kind of wraps everything up." Nevertheless, he has several more years as a 4-H'er and plans to continue to promote 4-H and take advantage of the opportunities it provides. "One of their goals is reaching the youth of America. I think they're doing a good job."

Sherry Goss

written material submitted by the participants.

Sherry says she has received a lot of personal achievement and satisfaction from the many successfully completed projects, but activities outside the project work have meant a lot to her. "I really enjoyed going to Capitol Days in Harrisburg. We had breakfast with our legislators and toured the Capitol. It was nice to talk with them and share ideas about 4-H."

Leadership Congress at Penn State is another activity that gets high marks from Sherry. "It is one of my favorite things. You get to meet people from all over, and then you often meet them throughout the year at other activities. Also you learn so much from workshops, and have a lot to bring back to the club and to the county."

Meeting new people is one of the high points of her involvement. "I have gotten to know people I wouldn't have met otherwise," she says.

Sherry has already ridden in some fair parades, and hopes to go to 4-H groups and perhaps some elementary schools to talk about 4-H. "I'd like to go out and speak to others about 4-H and promote it," she explains. She will appear with Greg at Park City Farmers Week at a 4-H booth.

Is 4-H worth the hard work? Sherry says, "I think it's worth it." She says she would like to see youngsters who begin in 4-H continue with it as they get older and can take advantage of the many activities available.

As co-president of County Council with last year's outstanding 4-H girl Deb Martin, Sherry is working to plan some activities to involve 4-H'ers throughout the county. She adds, "4-H gives you a chance to be a leader. We need the older kids to be teen leaders."

Sherry also thinks the competition is helpful. "If kids really want something, they can do anything. I think giving awards helps them strive to meet their goals. Otherwise kids wouldn't work so hard."

Sherry was named to the 4-H Junior Honor Roll in 1981 and to the Senior Honor Roll in 1982, something which means a lot to her. "I'd like to see more people get involved in that," she adds.

"I think 4-H has really taught me to become more responsible, and it has helped me learn to talke before a group of people. The confidence gained in 4-H carries over in other activities."

Although Sherry is deeply involved in 4-H, she finds time to play basketball, volleyball and tennis in her spare time. At Penn Manor High School, where she is a senior, she has been in plays and musicals and is secretary of the drama club. She has served on the volleyball team, as a tutor, a library aide and is on the band front. She is also active in Refton Brethren in Christ Church where she is a member of the youth group and works in the church nursery.

Sherry has several more years of eligibility in 4-H, and has a few more goals to work towards. One is to complete her blue report form and to qualify to attend Citizenship Washington Focus at the National 4-H Center.

With her determination and the abilities she has shown so far, she will most likely meet all her goals before she concludes her successful 4-H career. But her most important mission throughout this year is to encourage others to join the country's largest volunteer organization and enjoy some of the benefits it offers to young people.

October is Pork Month!

October is Pork Month and what better time than the crisp, cool days of fall to include pork in your menus?

With only 206 calories in each serving, pork provides an abundance of essential proteins, vitamins and minerals - and it tastes good too!

Cashew Stuffed Pork Chops, featuring pork chops filled with stuffing and cashews and cooked in mushroom soup, tops the list of this week's recipes.

CASHEW STUFFED PORK CHOPS

6 pork rib chops, cut 1 to 1½ inches thick
2 cups herb bread cubes (use prepared stuffing mix)
½ cup hot water
⅓ cup chopped celery
⅓ cup chopped onion
2 tablespoons butter or margarine
1 egg, slightly beaten
½ cup chopped cashew nuts
2 tablespoons shortening
1 10½-ounce can condensed cream of mushroom soup
½ cup water

Cut a pocket in each pork chop by cutting into the center of the chop from the rib side, parallel to rib bone and surface of chop. Combine bread cubes and hot water in a small bowl. Cook celery and onion in butter or margarine until tender. Add egg, celery and onion mixture and cashew nuts to bread cubes; mix well. Fill pocket in pork chops with stuffing. In a large frying pan, brown chops in shortening; pour off drippings. Combine mushroom soup and water and pour over chops. Cover tightly and simmer 1 hour or until done. Serves 6.

PORK AND CHERRY PIE

1 16-ounce can pitted tart red cherries
2 tablespoons brown sugar
1 tablespoon cornstarch
1 pound ground pork
1 medium onion, chopped
½ cup fine dry bread crumbs
½ cup chicken broth
½ teaspoon ground sage
Pastry for 2-crust 9-inch pie

Drain cherries; reserve ½ cup liquid. In skillet, combine reserved liquid, sugar, and cornstarch. Cook and stir till bubbly. Cook 2 minutes more. Remove from heat. Stir in cherries. Set aside. Cook pork and onion till pork is brown. Drain off fat. Stir in crumbs, broth, sage, 1/8 teaspoon salt and dash pepper. Line a 9-inch pie plate with half the pastry. Press in meat mixture. Spoon cherry mixture atop. Adjust top crust; seal and flute edges. Cut a design in top crust. Bake in 375°F. oven for 50 minutes. Let stand 10 minutes. Serves 6.

STUFFED CROWN ROAST OF PORK

6 to 8 pound pork crown roast (about 20 ribs)
2 teaspoons salt
1 teaspoon pepper
Bread stuffing

Heat oven to 325°F. Season meat with salt and pepper. Place meat bone ends up in open shallow roasting pan; wrap bone ends in aluminum foil to prevent excessive browning. To hold shape of roast, place a small oven-proof bowl or cup in crown.

Insert meat thermometer so tip is in thickest part of meat and does not rest on fat or bone. Do not add water. Do not cover. Roast 30 to 35 minutes per pound or until meat thermometer registers 170°F.

One hour before meat is done, remove bowl from center of crown; fill crown with your choice of bread stuffing. Use about 8 cups of stuffing for an 8-pound crown. Cover just the stuffing with aluminum foil during first 30 minutes.

When roast is done, remove foil from bone ends and replace with crab apples or paper frills. Optional: garnish stuffing with sliced water chestnuts. To carve, remove stuffing to serving bowl; cut between ribs. Serves 12.

HAM WAFFLES

2 cups Bisquick baking mix
2 tablespoons salad oil or melted shortening
1⅓ cups milk
1 egg
1 3-ounce package smoked pressed ham, cut up

Beat baking mix, oil, milk and egg with rotary beater until smooth. Stir in ham. Pour batter from cup or pitcher onto center of hot waffle iron. Bake until steaming stops. Lift off waffles carefully with fork. Makes three 9-inch waffles.

MANHATTAN MEATBALLS

1 pound ground pork
1 pound ground beef
2 cups soft bread crumbs
2 eggs
½ cup chopped onion
2 tablespoons chopped parsley
Little salt
2 tablespoons margarine
1 10-ounce jar apricot preserves
½ cup barbecue sauce

Combine meat, bread crumbs, eggs, onion and seasonings. Mix lightly. Shape into medium meat balls. Brown in margarine. Place in casserole. Combine preserves and barbecue sauce. Pour over meat. Bake at 350°F. for 30 minutes. Makes 4 to 5 dozen meat balls.

TROPICAL PORK SALAD

1½ to 2 cups cubed (¾-inch) cooked pork roast
2 cups chilled cooked rice
½ cup chopped green pepper
½ cup sliced celery
1 8-ounce can pineapple chunks in juice
½ cup salad dressing
¼ teaspoon ginger
¼ teaspoon salt
Crisp salad greens
Mint or watercress garnish, optional

Combine pork, rice, green pepper and celery in bowl. Drain pineapple chunks; reserve 2 tablespoons juice. Add pineapple chunks to salad ingredients. Combine and mix salad dressing, 2 tablespoons pineapple juice, ginger and salt; mix well. Pour over salad ingredients; toss lightly to coat evenly. Cover. Chill well. Serve on salad greens. Garnish with mint or watercress. Makes 4 servings, about 4 cups salad mixture.

Pork is also delicious served cold like in the Tropical Pork Salad pictured here.

PORK BURGERS

Gov. Thornburgh declares Oct. 14 Farm Women Day

BY JOYCE BUPP
Staff Correspondent

HARRISBURG — "That's the smallest pumpkin I've ever seen," quipped a grinning Gov. Dick Thornburgh as he fished the perfectly-shaped, though diminutive, orange vegetable from a basket of commodities overflowing onto his polished reception room desk.

The mini-pumpkin was part of a colorful array of Pennsylvania commodities presented to the governor by the Pennsylvania Society of Farm Women last week. Leaders of the more than 4,000 members of the group were on hand as the Governor signed a proclamation designating Sunday, Oct. 14, as Farm Women's Day in the Commonwealth.

In his proclamation, the Governor recognized the Society, founded in 1914, for playing an "integral roll in perpetuating and preserving our agricultural traditions."

His proclamation further lauds these women who "foster a deeper appreciation for the farm and rural life today and seek to uphold the dignity and purpose of farming, while teaching responsibility in working the soil."

According to Marie Baughman, state society president, members of the 190 local groups in several counties plan to celebrate their day in a variety of ways.

"Most are combining food and fellowship, with lunches, brunches and dinners together as part of their observance," says the Franklin County farm women leader.

In her home county, farm women members plan brunch with a program focusing on Franklin County's 200th bicentennial anniversary being celebrated this year.

Lebanon County's societies are taking a slightly different approach, as each local group is contributing to a special fund that has been established for a county family faced with mounting medical bills due to their child's serious illness.

In addition to the state proclamation, Lancaster County societies will be honored with a similar recognition from their county commissioners, and in York, members from over 30 societies will gather for an open-house fellowship.

Farm Women are now finalizing plans for their state convention on Jan. 14 and 15 at the state Farm Show with an emphasis on youth.

"Doing a good deed for someone" is the theme, with children and grandchildren of members invited to submit a photo or drawing of how they've helped someone else. Each entrant will receive recognition with a special memento.

Look-alike lobsters span 90 million years

WASHINGTON — Sometimes you don't have to get your feet wet to look for lobsters. Instead, you put on cowboy boots and head inland to cattle and sheep ranches in the northern Black Hills.

Lobsters in South Dakota? There are hundreds lying out there on the open range–bits of tails, legs, and bodies hardened into clay-like nuggets barely distinguishable from the dry, cracked earth.

They're 90-million-year-old fossilized remains from the time when South Dakota was a sea bed, when the ancient Gulf of Mexico reached north into Canada. It's a different version of "surf and turf."

These lobsters aren't edible, of course. But other members of their genus, Linuparus, are still crawling about the oceans today, though only in waters thousands of miles away, in the South China Sea and the Indian and Pacific oceans, off Africa and Australia.

FROM TIME OF DINOSAURS

"Linuparus is a rare living fossil. It was around with the dinosaurs and it's practically unchanged throughout a tremendous span of time," says paleontologist Gale A. Bishop, who has spent two summers on the South Dakota range picking up the black fossilized pieces that ranchers call "spider rocks."

Linuparus lobsters are not the famous big-clawed American lobsters found off the New England coast. They have no claws and are harvested primarily for their tail meat. They belong to the family popularly known as spiny or rock lobsters, which inhabit tropical and warm temperate waters.

"It's incredible to be able to still see such primitive lobsters alive today and possibly have the chance to study the biology of something that lived millions of years ago, to see how they eat, mate, and live," says Bishop.

Why did Linuparus lobsters, like horseshoe crabs, for example, survive so long unchanged, and why are they found today only in the South China Sea and Indo-Pacific region? No one yet has the answers.

Bishop believes in starting in the beginning–when the lobsters first crawled along the sea bottom. They are known to have existed in both North American and European waters from the Early Cretaceous Period (about 130 million years ago) to the Early Eocene, about 50 million years ago.

In western South Dakota, Bishop has discovered a "lobster zone" along a narrow 54-mile-long strip of land. To collect the thousands of 90-million-year-old fragments, he and field assistant Brian Meyer covered at least five miles a day on foot.

PIECES IN A PUZZLE

A professor of geology at Georgia Southern College in Statesboro, Bishop is gluing together the pieces of these 3-D jigsaw puzzles in his campus lab. A single foot-long lobster may have broken into 30 pieces or more. He has about 400 at least partially complete lobsters from South Dakota.

Fossilized Linuparus specimens also have been found near Dallas, Texas, in northern Mississippi, and along the Chesapeake and Delaware Canal. All of these areas were under water when the North American landmass was split in two by the western interior seaway.

The ancient lobsters in North America lived in shallow waters in the oozy, soft sea bottom, probably on a diet of shellfish.

Today Linuparus live in a similar muddy environment, but in much deeper waters at depths of 250 to 1,000 feet, says zoologist Austin B. Williams of the National Marine Fisheries Service. William is collaborating with Bishop in comparing the fossils with the only three Linuparus species still known to exist. There are 27 extinct species.

Because of the depths at which they now live, today's Linuparus lobsters are more difficult to reach than their 90-million-year-old ancestors on dry land. A very small amount get caught with the 400 million pounds of lobsters that make up the world's average annual catch, says Williams. They show up primarily among frozen lobster tails from Japan.

To observe their behavior would require the use of a camera-equipped submersible. Bishop and Williams theorize that the lobsters still look and live so much like their ancestors because their habitat, though deeper, probably has not changed, and their food resources have remained stable.

Whether the lobsters migrated to the Indo-Pacific from North America or were always there is not known.

At this point, Bishop has seen more fossilized lobsters than live Linuparus. And he has yet to taste a morsel of sweet Linuparus.

Ninety million years separate three fossil Linuparus lobsters from their modern relative, the one with antennae. In comparing them, paleontologist Gale Bishop, left, and zoologist Austin Williams discovered that time and distance have barely changed them. They were found thousands of miles apart.

THE MICRO WAY

LANI BLOOMER

Use your microwave for pizza

Let's take a look at using your microwave for cooking and reheating pizza. If you have a browning grill or microwave pizza oven, you can cook homemade pizza in your microwave, or reheat pizza with a crispy crust. These utensils are expensive to buy, but they cook or reheat pizza in less time than it takes to preheat most range ovens. Also, a microwave uses much less energy to run than a range oven.

Without a browning grill or pizza oven, you can't make a homemade pizza using an uncooked crust, but you can reheat pizza. However, pizza reheated without one of these utensils will have a soft, not crispy crust.

— Reheating take-out pizza: Don't put pizza directly on a plate to reheat, because steam will get trapped between the crust and plate and make the crust very soggy. Instead, put one or two slices on a double thickness of paper towels, and put it on an oven shelf or bacon/roast rack. If you have several pieces, put the points together and the edges facing out so the points don't overcook.

Heat on medium high (70,7) for 15-45 seconds for one or two slices, until the cheese is hot and bubbly. If the pizza has been refrigerated, increase the time to 45 seconds to 2 minutes. The exact time will depend on the size and thickness of the slices.

— Reheating Frozen Pizza: The best way to reheat frozen pizza is to use a browning grill, or pizza browner/oven. These utensils will give you a hot, bubbly pizza with a brown, crispy crust. The utensils come with directions on cooking times. However, if you don't have the directions for your browning grill, here's some help!

Preheat the grill 3-5 minutes (3 for little grills, 5 for large size) on high. Remove pizza from packaging, brush ice off bottom of crust. Place on the preheated browner and cook, uncovered, on high for 5-10 minutes until the center of the cheese is melted. Check the bottom of the crust after 3-4 minutes to make sure it isn't burning. If the crust browns or burns before the cheese melts, preheat your grill for less time.

To reheat frozen pizza without a browning grill, put the pizza on several layers of paper towels and put it in the oven on a rack or shelf. Reheat on medium (50,5) for 7-10 minutes or until the center cheese is hot. Once again, the exact time will depend on size and thickness. Using medium power instead of high or reheat will keep the outside edges of the crust from getting hard (overcooking).

— Homemade Pizza: If you have a microwave pizza oven, use your favorite recipe for pizza, whether it's a mix or scratch recipe, and follow the manufacturer's directions. The pizza oven I have used calls for making the pizza directly in the utensil, and cooking for 10-15 minutes on high, covered. The crust comes out beautifully brown and crispy. However, if you put on very thick toppings or cheese, the pizza may take longer than this to cook.

If you have a browning grill, you can make homemade pizza on this. Use your favorite crust recipe, and preheat the grill 3-5 minutes. Spread the crust out on wax paper in a size to fit the grill, and invert on preheated, oiled grill. Remove the wax paper and cook crust alone on medium (50, 5) for 2-4 minutes until the crust is firm and not doughy (4-6 minutes for a thick crust). Add sauce, toppings and cheese and cook on high for 4-5 minutes until the center is hot and bubbly.

The Mini Snack Pizzas are a quick and easy snack, and would be good for teens to make. Young children need adult supervision for cooking these, since a browning grill gets very hot.

Mini Snack Pizzas

1 can (10 or 12) refrigerated biscuits
1 10-ounce can pizza sauce
Pepperoni, mushrooms, peppers, etc. as desired for topping.
4-6 ounces shredded mozzarella cheese
Olive oil or vegetable oil.

1. Preheat browning grill 2-4 minutes on high.
2. Separate 4 biscuits from the package and roll each into a 3-inch circle on an oiled bread board. They should be very thin, since they will puff up when cooking.
3. Oil the grill lightly and place the 4 crusts on the hot grill. Cook for 15-20 seconds per crust (1 minute for 4) until they are brown on the bottom. Remove them to the breadboard with a metal spatula, flipping them over so the brown side is up.
4. Reheat grill for 2 minutes while you put the sauce on.
5. Spread about 1 tablespoon sauce on each crust, add toppings if desired, and top with about 1 tablespoon shredded cheese.
6. Return to the heated grill and cook for 20-25 seconds per pizza (1½ minutes for 4) until the cheese melts. Let stand for 1 minute before serving. Serves 10-12.

Note: The times above are for ovens with 600-700 Watts of power. For 500-600 W. add 10 seconds to each minute; for 400-500 add 20 seconds to each minute.

Give plain pants tuxedo look

Keeping up with fashion doesn't always require large sums of money or long hours at a sewing machine. This year, one of the prettiest, easiest and least expensive ways to brighten up your wardrobe is with the addition of ribbons and trim.

Because of the wide variety of ribbons available nowadays, you can find the right ribbon for any garment. Most variety stores carry ribbons in a multitude of colors, patterns and widths.

By stitching ribbon on a tailored pantsuit, for example, you'll create a fashionable tuxedo look. In the same way, plain sweaters turn into expensive-looking originals by adding stain ribbons and bows.

Almost anything is possible with ribbons and imagination. Here are some suggestions:

MATERIALS: Preshrunk 100 percent polyester ribbons in any color, pattern or width desired. C.M. Offray ribbons, which have virtually no shrinkage, are recommended.

TUXEDO LOOK: Suggestion: Use velvet ribbon on a flannel, tailored pantsuit. 1. Stitch ribbons along the seamlines, hem, collar and cuffs of the jacket. 2. Stitch ribbons along side seams of the trousers.

MATERIALS: Culottes or gaucho pants with full legs; sewing machine; matching thread; straight pins; tailor's chalk or felt-tip fabric marking pen; iron.

PREPARATION: 1. Rip crotch seam to about 9 inches below the waistline. If zipper is in center-front or center-back, zip crotch seam to one-half inch below bottom of zipper. 2. Reinforce seam to keep it from coming unstitched. 3. Take out hem.

CREATING NEW SEAMS: 1. Try garment on, right side out. 2. To establish center-front seamline, overlap front pieces at center front, and pin together. 3. Establish center-back seamline by pinning together back pieces.

BASTING: 1. Take off skirt. Mark new seamlines with fabric marking pen or tailor's chalk. 2. Re-pin with right sides together. 3. Baste. 4. Trim away excess fabric, but leave generous seam allowances.

STITCHING: 1. Gently press seams open. 2. Try on skirt again; make adjustments if necessary. 3. Machine-stitch seams. 4. Trim seams to five-eights inch, and overcast. 5. Hem skirt. 6. Press all seams open.

Bradford Extension offers pattern alteration class

TOWANDA — Anyone can make patterns fit! Learn how at an Extension-sponsored workshop on Monday, Oct. 15 from 10 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. at Claverack Electric. Irene James, nationally known home economist instructor and author, will present her own fitting techniques in the four hour workshop, "Alterations By The Number."

Your fitting questions will be answered in detail in Irene's workshop as she handles many pattern alteration problems and pattern types. Everyone participates on ¼ scale patterns and learns together. She shows "Fitting-by-the-Numbers" using the skills of any designer or pattern grader: Pivot and Slide. These techniques can be used on any pattern style.

Everyone in attendance will be measured for their correct pattern size, the first and most important "Number" in her fitting system.

The other numbers Irene will explain completely are:

1. What are your own individual alteration changes?
2. How much ease is allowed in every pattern you make?
3. How do you place the guide numbers on your pattern?
4. How can you follow these numbers to alter for both length and width?

Using this system and participating in the workshop will allow anyone to have a closet full of clothes that fit them!

For more information and to register for the workshop, contact the Bradford County Extension Office, 701 South Fourth Street or call 265-2896.

Safety precautions are necessary when installing woodstoves

BY SUZANNE KEENE

LANCASTER — Over the last several years many people have installed woodstoves in their homes in an effort to reduce heating costs. However, an increase of woodstove and chimney related house fires has accompanied their efforts.

Last year 35 percent of the house fires in Lancaster County were woodstove or chimney related, Lancaster County fire service coordinator Randall Gockley reports. Throughout the past week, which was designated Fire Prevention Week, Gockley has been spreading the word about how to install and operate woodstoves safely.

The consumer should be careful to select the proper size woodstove for his needs, Gockley advises. If the stove is too big, it will bake the room where it is located, while if it is too small, people may be tempted to try to heat too large an area with it. A reputable dealer can provide advise on the proper size for individual needs.

Once the customer purchases the stove, he is often tempted to cut costs by installing it himself. The problem with this, Gockley warns, is that the consumer often does not realize the amount of heat that the stove and stovepipe can radiate, and therefore does not take the necessary precautions to prevent fires.

"Many times when individuals install it, they do not follow the safety guidelines that they should," Gockley says, estimating that 50 percent of the woodstoves in the county are not installed according to safety guidelines.

The two most common mistakes people make when installing a woodstove, he said, are placing it too close to combustible materials and failing to provide proper clearance and insulation for the stovepipe.

The stove should be at least 36 inches from any combustible material, not up tight against the wall, Gockley advised. The radiant heat produced by the stove could ignite any combustible material that gets too close.

Sheet metal or other non-combustible material should be placed under the stove to offer protection against sparks that may jump out, Gockley said. The floor protection should extend 18 inches on the loading side of the stove and 12 inches on all other sides.

The stovepipe also gives off a lot of radiant heat that can cause a fire if the pipe is installed too close to combustible wall materials. Over a period of years, wood and other combustibles placed near a stovepipe become like charcoal and posses an ignition temperature so low that radiant heat could ignite nearby walls or partitions.

Gockley said that safe installation standards call for 18 inches of open space on all sides of the pipe and a layer of brick, asbestos or other non-combustible material for extra protection.

Chimneys can also become fire hazards when they are not properly maintained. "People don't clean their chimneys often enough," Gockley says.

A chimney should be cleaned at least once a year, or more often if necessary. A stovepipe needs cleaned if it produces a thud instead of a hollow, ringing noise when tapped, Gockley said. The thud indicates a creosote buildup that can eventually completely block the pipe. To check a chimney for creosote, hold a mirror up in the cleanout.

Creosote is a tar-like substance which accumulates inside a chimney because of improper burning. Gockley explained that creosote is formed during the burning of unseasoned or moist wood. If creosote cools before it leaves the chimney, it transforms from a vapor to a solid form and sticks to the sides of the chimney.

Over a period of time, Gockley said, the creosote can build up until the chimney passage is narrowed or completely blocked and can ignite, causing a chimney fire.

During a chimney fire smoke will back up into the house and flames will shoot from the chimney. It will create a noise similar to a freight train, and the woodstove may visibly shake.

Usually the fire will create enough heat that the creosote will return to its vapor form and the fire will go out, Gockley explained.

However, during that short time when there is a fire, the chimney can be cracked. If this happens, the fireplace should not be used again until it is inspected by a masonry contractor or a stove dealer, Gockley said.

Even though the fire may be over as quickly as it began, Gockley suggests that homeowners call the fire company, just in case smouldering sparks start another fire.

Gockley said he has seen a clean chimney blocked in as few as 48 hours when unseasoned, wet wood is burning slowly. He recommends that during the winter months, when the stove is used daily, the chimney be checked for creosote at least once a week. The gaskets and seals on woodstoves should also be checked periodically for cracks.

Occasionally, a woodstove can get so hot that it will glow red, creating still another fire hazard, Gockley said. If this should happen, close the damper to slow the air intake and reduce the temperature of the fire, he advised.

Do not pour water on it, Gockley cautioned, because water will cause the stove to crack. A dry chemical fire extinguisher, which should always be kept near the stove, can also be used.

Today, the last day of Fire Prevention Week, offers an opportunity to review your fire safety practices. Do you have a fire extinguisher next to your stove? Does your woodstove adhere to safety standards? If not, now is the time to make the necessary changes for a safe woodburning season.

Lancaster County fire service coordinator Randall Gockley stands by a woodstove that is part of a fire safety display in the Park City Shopping Mall. Throughout Fire Prevention Week, Gockley has been offering information on how to install and operate woodstoves safely.

Trick or Treat Traditions

Stacks of sweet goodies at the check-out counters remind me that it is time to stock up-not for a snow storm but for the throngs of trick-or-treaters who will soon be masquerading at my front door.

Preparing for this occasion "back home" meant baking and decorating a double batch of delicious gingie cookies decorated like pumpkins. Other memories include the assembling of a costume, carving a jack-o-lantern, and finding the biggest "loot" bag available.

Living on the farm out in the country made trick or treating at four neighbors an entire evening affair. One of the favorite parts of the evening was going to Grandma and Granpap's house, where they spent considerable time admiring the costumes and guessing who was inside which costume. And of course, with this task accomplished, a treat was dropped into our "loot" bag. One especially memorable Halloween was the year Mom and Dad dressed up too!

At this time many families are busily creating ghosts, goblins, movie stars and super heroes for this year's halloween celebration.

Unfortunately, this fun-filled tradition has become a time when many parents dread the tricks and fear the treats! To ensure that this tradition continues to be a safe and happy one for your family, review these tips.

Make sure costumes are flame-resistant and do not dangle or trail behind the child. Candelit jack-o-lanterns should not be carried by children and should be kept away from doorsteps where trick-or-treaters' costumes might brush against the flame.

Costumes with unaccustomed fullness and extra length, may be ignited more easily because they are cumbersome, or because the sleeves are billowly and full. When selecting costumes, beards, masks or wigs, look for flame resistant labels. If you are making a costume, you can treat it with this flame retardent mixture: Mix seven ounces of Borax and three ounces of Boric acid in two quarters of hot water. Soak the costume and drip dry. This procedure can keep your ghost or goblin from a fightening disaster.

Supervise young children. I believe it is more fun and safer to go only to homes of people you know. If your children are stopping at homes of people you do not know, ask them not to eat any treats until you can check the "loot". Providing a treat to eat along the way may help to avoid this temptation.

Remember to choose costumes which are light or bright enough to be seen clearly by motorists. Even witches can wear reflective tapes over their gowns and carry flashlights.

If you would like to take the focus off a candy treat, you might try offering one of these ideas this year.

Penny Pumpkins - cut out orange paper pumpkins and with a marking pen draw on a happy grin. Glue on pennies for eyes and nose. (If inflation has hit your neighborhood, try nickles and dimes.)

Halloween Pencils-Take two identical Halloween stickers and stick them back to back near the top of a pencil.

Sugarless Gum-Stick stickers onto pieces of sugarless gum.

Cheese Ghost Snack-Cut a seven-inch cheese log into one-inch sections. Put a popsicle stick into cheese piece. Cover with clear wrap and two white tissues. Smooth the tissues and tie at the "neck" with white yarn. Use a black marker for eyes, nose and mouth.

Even though I have no plans to "dress-up" this year, one tradition will continue. It just wouldn't be Halloween without making the family favorite, Halloween Pumpkins Gingies. I've included the recipe below in case you would like to share in our family tradition.

Halloween Pumpkin Gingies

⅓ cup shortening
1 cup brown sugar
1 ½ cup molasses
⅔ cup water
6 cups flour
2 teaspoons baking soda
1 teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon allspice
1 teaspoon ginger
1 teaspoon ground cloves
1 teaspoon cinnamon

Mix all of the above ingredients Chill. Roll out dough to ¼-inch thickness. Cut with a cookie cutter Bake at 350 for 15 minutes. Cool and decorate with icing to look like jack-o-lanterns.

Happy Halloween!

Children Can Create Halloween Costumes

Halloween is approaching and your children are probably starting to think of that "perfect" costume for the big night of trick or treating. Save money and foster creativity by helping them design their own costumes this year.

For inspiration they might think of favorite cartoon characters or look at coloring or story books. Rummage through your attic and basement for old clothing and other articles which could be turned into imaginative costumes.

Boxes with holes for arms can be painted or colored. Smaller children can decorate large paper sacks, then cut holes for head and arms.

Try looking into an old clothes bag for garments that, with a little pinning or quick sewing, will create a young witch or fairy princess. Think of unusual ways to use old clothes for costumes. Pajama bottoms with feet can be stuffed, then use for an upside-down hat. An old skirt can be worn around the neck with holes cut out for arms. A little basting can make old fabric scraps or old sheets and towels the perfect touch for a creative costume.

What types of sports equipment do you have around your house? Can you put together a football uniform, tennis outfit or a wet suit?

Instead of masks, try letting children decorate their faces. Inexpensive make-up or colored chalk can be used. You can even use watercolor paints if a good base of hand lotion is first applied to the face. To create a ghostly effect, apply flour over a hand lotion base.

Supermarket Psychology

In supermarket "psychology of selling" causing you to drain your pocketbook? You may think you have exhausted all the ways of cutting your food budget, but becoming aware of the sales techniques used to encourage you to buy more can help cut down impulse buying.

Most supermarkets are arranged so people will have to walk around most of the store to reach needed major foods such as meat, fresh fruits, milk, frozen juice and bread. A study done by "Progressive Grocer" showed that in a 12-aisle supermarket, between 60 percent and 80 percent of the shoppers went into the interior aisles of the market when shopping. Walking every aisle once a week is good for business but not for your pocketbook. Most likely you will exit with more than what's on your shopping list.

Many of the "power" items such as produce, meat, dairy and bakeries are located around the edges of the store. This is because of the need for refrigeration, water and stocking from the back.

High profit items like candy, gum and toys are placed strategically at check-out counters. You know what that does to any children you have in tow.

Items of interest to adult consumers are placed at adult eye and arm level throughout the store. Impulse items are also placed there or among the staples so they won't be missed. "Stand-by" items like flour and sugar may be located near the floor or high on the shelf because shoppers are willing to stoop or reach for these necessities.

Often nonfood and food items are displayed together so that shoppers will purchase both. For example, you may see cookies, sauces, ice cream dippers, and parfait glasses near the ice cream. Children's clothing and medicinal needs are often stocked on the same shelf as the baby food.

Don't be fooled by mass displays. Instead of a bargain, they may be regularly priced articles merely displayed in a special way.

Multiple pricing has a remarkable power of suggestion. Sales soar when items are stamped two for 59 cents rather than 30 cents each. Often fruits and vegetables are priced 5 for 79 cents, for example, and many shoppers buy the entire bunch even if there is no saving.

Supermarkets are making up for their low-profit food lines by carrying an increasing array of high markup lines such as health and beauty aids, kitchenware, auto supplies and paints. Soap, paper goods, magazines, hand lotion and similar items purchased at the store add up to about twenty-three cents of every dollar spent in a food store which isn't food at all.

On being a farm wife - And other hazards

Joyce Bupp

Golden. That's a word that has always designated something very special, very rich, very precious.

We laud the rarity of golden wedding anniversaries, golden eagles, glittering, pure golden objects. And fewer things are more pure than this month of October. Of the year's dozen diverse months, October has always been a favorite of mine.

Like couples celebrating their golden 50th year of wedded togetherness, October knows, understands and is totally comfortable with itself. Either it has been a productive year or a lean one, and October can no longer change what the growing months have wrought, save to offer strings of golden days for storing it away.

This particular October promises to be especially rich, a rejoicing in the gathering season of nature's golden goodness.

Corn, kernels of mellow yellowness wrapped in rustling cloaks of a more faded shade, has lived up to all the glossy, glowing promises of shiny advertising pamphlets. Fat ears, many stalks blessed with a matching set, make apologies for the sparseness with which farmers scratched through the past belt-tightening months of bare bins and wind-swept, barren barn floors.

Soybeans are going golden as well, dropping their limp, yellowing leaves to blanket the field floor, exposing proud, straight stalks showing off trio-clusters of brown fuzzy pods fat with beige-toned beans.

In the boggy area below the pond, swamp maples add flaming orange accents to the meadow's subtle shading of fading greens and tired, tan grass.

Oaks dot the fencerow with muted bronze, giant old patriarch watching yet another season transform the pasture. Through their rustling canopies, a host of squirrels race - do squirrels ever walk? – about the pressing seasonal business of stashing nuts and the bounty of acorns against the winter hungries.

Even the fading, grayish thistles flash with gold, as tiny finches cling to the thorny, jagged stems, gobbling their fill of the nourishing seeds buried through the fluffy ripe heads.

Much of the garden has passed to obscurity beneath late fall weeds. What remains are pale-gold lumps of butternut squash, slowly emerging as the tangled mass of vines wither. We gather them by the wheelbarrow loads, piling this last harvest on the porch, to share with friends willing to help whittle down the stack.

Some, though, will find their way into the kitchen to be transformed into just about the very best tasting harvest gold of the season: pumpkin pie.

Ag in the Classroom program brings the farm to school

BY SUZANNE KEENE

LANCASTER — Sixty pairs of arms reach simultaneously toward one tiny, squealing piglet, while patient, smiling teachers struggle to recover order in their classrooms.

When at last the teachers are successful, each youngster takes a turn at holding the piglet in his arms for just a few seconds and to feel its compact, bristly body squirm against him.

The piglet and other farm animals, products and implements all came to school this week as part of an "Ag in the Classroom" project developed through the combined efforts of the Department of Education, the Department of Agriculture and the Pennsylvania Farmers Association.

Potato farmer Jane Eshleman, coordinator of the program in Lancaster County and a former Penn Manor school board member, headed the pilot program in the Penn Manor School District this week.

A total of thirteen farmers and several groups of FFA'ers traveled to the six elementary schools in the Penn Manor District in an effort to give approximately 270 third-grade students a better understanding of agriculture and the role it plays in the economy and in society.

The farmers gave presentations on a variety of agricultural topics including fruits and vegetables, FFA, beef, chickens, hogs and dairy. A number of the farmers brought along feed, animals, farm implements, and slides to share with the students, giving additional weight to their verbal message.

Hog producer Nancy Charles came to the classroom equipped with a "Porky" pig puppet, who explained the workings of the hog industry from a pig's point of view. Her presentation also included slides of her farm and a visit from a real piglet.

All eyes were on this tiny piglet that visited the third-graders at Ann Letort Elementary School as part of the Ag in Classroom program this week. Each student had a chance to hold the squealing creature.

Beef producers Marsha and Henry Barley brought a tractor to school as part of their Ag in the Classroom presentation. Here, Karen Gochnauer and Steven Hoffman marvel at the size of the wheel.

Using a slide presentation consisting of scenes from their farm, beef producers Marsha and Henry Barley showed the youngsters the equipment they use to run their farm and the chores that they must do each day. The tractor they brought with them was the highlight of the children's day.

The groups of high school FFA'ers who visited the classrooms explained their different projects and told the younger students about the vo-ag program available in the high school.

Jane and Guy Eshleman, potato farmers, explained to the students that some vegetables grow on top of the soil, some on stalks and some below the ground. The students also learned that potato farmers must battle potato bugs and later enjoyed a treat of potato chips.

Dairy farmers Nelson Habecker and John Barley explained dairy farming to the students and showed them a cow and calf and the amount of food and water each cow consumes every day. Later in

City teachers attend Ag in the Classroom workshop

BY SUZANNE KEENE

LANCASTER — About 15 Lancaster School District teachers voluntarily attended an Ag in the Classroom workshop last week to talk about ways of incorporating information about farming into their classrooms.

The workshop, headed by Carolyn Holleran from the Pennsylvania Council on Economic Education, was primarily designed to help teachers prepare their students for a field trip to Lancaster Harvest Days. The teachers were also encouraged to incorporate farming information into their classes throughout the school year.

The program featured a talk by Lancaster County extension agent Jay Irwin, who focused on agriculture's impact on the county's economy. "No other area has the production we do," he said, citing production statistics for the past year.

Dairy farmer John Barley presented a lecture on dairying that he plans to give to third-grade students during an Ag in the Classroom project in the Penn Manor School District. His presentation included facts about dairy cows and dairy products.

Karen Freeman, a member of Lancaster County's Land Preservation Board, told the teachers about the movement to protect farmland and discussed the zoning changes and planning necessary to protect prime farmland from development.

Carolyn Holleran

Later in the program the teachers received teaching materials to use in their classrooms.

Shirley Duschel, a third-grade teacher attending the workshop, said she learned a lot about farming during the program and was excited about using the teaching materials in her classes.

The workshop is just one part of the Ag in the Classroom program, which is a national movement to help young people better understand the source of their food supply and the role of agriculture in the total economy and society.

the program, the students had the opportunity to sample some chocolate milk.

Giving similar demonstrations were Bob Bachman, Bob Kendig, Ray Reitz, Jeff Brukholder and Gerald Garber.

The information provided in each of the sessions brought forth a flurry of questions from the students. They wanted to know how much a calf weighs when it's born, how long it takes for a pumpkin to grow and how you can tell if an animal is a boy or a girl.

The farmers patiently answered these questions and many, many more throughout the course of the three-day program.

The timing of the project coincided with a social studies unit on farming. "It fits into the third grade curriculum just perfect," said Helen Kocken, a third-grade teacher at Ann Letort Elementary.

William Wood, a principal for two of the elementary schools in the district, said that teachers and administrators alike have shown an enthusiastic response to the program and hope that it will return next year. Wood said he believes agricultural programs like the Ag in the Classroom project are especially important in areas like Lancaster County where farming is prevalent.

Jane Eshleman, county coordinator for the project, and a group of planners worked out the Penn Manor project by following guidelines issued by the Pennsylvania Department of Agriculture and the Pennsylvania Department of Education. Ag in the Classroom is a national program with individual states and counties responsible for developing their own programs according to the guidelines, she explained. In Pennsylvania, the Farmers Association is heading the project.

The basic philosophy of the program, she explained, is to utilize existing organizations such as farm women groups, the Chamber of Commerce and the Farmers Association to educate youngsters about agriculture.

The people who are participating in the program are all doing so on a voluntary basis. Eshleman said she is very pleased with the response of the farmers who were willing to take time out during the busy harvest season to visit the schools.

Farmers are willing to devote their time to the program, dairy farmer John Barley said, because they believe it is something that will make a difference in how people perceive agriculture and farmers.

"People think milk comes from a shelf in the supermarket," he said, noting that it is this kind of misconception that farmers hope to eradicate through Ag in the Classroom.

Their message has already influenced the career aspirations of one young student, who upon seeing the impressive size of an International tractor remarked: "I wanted to be a truck driver, but now I'm going to be a farmer!"

Key 4-H leaders to meet in Washington

NEWARK, DEL. — Key 4-H leaders—super-volunteers who recruit and train others—will meet in Washington, D.C., Oct. 15-20 for a national forum sponsored by Stanley Home Products and Hershey Foods Corporation.

Dover 4-H volunteer Delores Smoot will attend the forum, which will be held at the National 4-H Center. She and other leaders from around the nation will share ideas on recruiting, training, supporting and recognizing adult 4-H volunteers. They'll attend workshops focusing on 4-H visibility, community resource development, citizenship, and leadership development.

They'll also visit Capitol Hill and the Smithsonian Institution. Finally, each participant will prepare a plan of action to carry out at home.

The key leaders' forum was planned by a committee of volunteer leaders and staff representing the Cooperative Extension Service, with headquarters in state land grant universities, and the U.S. Department of Agriculture. These cooperating agencies conduct the 4-H program nationwide.

4-H'ers ride away with honors at state horse show

HARRISBURG — Of the 7,500 young people enrolled in the 4-H horse project, nearly 500 earned the opportunity to participate in the 25th Annual State 4-H Horse Show held at the Farm Show Building in Harrisburg last weekend.

For most of the participants the show was the culimination of a successful season with honors at the local and regional levels.

The show offers the 4-H'ers an opportunity to showcase the knowledge and skills they've learned by participating in the 4-H program. The 4-H'ers have learned a great deal about the care, training and cost of their animals, interim state 4-H program director Caroll Howes said. They have also learned a great deal about honesty, respect, confidence, leadership and speaking ability as they have participated in the project, he said.

Participting in 33 classes of competition, the 4-H'ers vied for ribbons to hang on bedroom walls and for the honor that accompanies a win at a state event.

Judges for the show were David Dye, Williamsburg; Tom Gibbs, College Station, Texas; and W. Dayton Sumner, Phoenix, Md..

Suzi Ross of R1 Washington, received the equitation and reigning saddle from G. Richard Keim, left, of Carlisle. At right is Carroll L. Howes, interim state 4-H program leader at Penn State.

Sheri Pierce, Schaefferstown, won first place in the hunt-type yearling gelding class with her horse Mike's Pride. This is the second year that Sheri and Mike's Pride have placed first at the show.

Nottingham Park gets a new ring

WEST CHESTER — Chester County's Nottingham Park now has a show ring which is available for 4-H Club shows and competitions, dog shows, horse shows, and more. It is a graded dirt ring with a natural grass seating area on a hillside, and spectator and trailer parking areas. The ring meets national standards and is 120 feet wide by 240 long and constructed of board fencing with posts eight feet apart.

There is no charge for open riding and individual use, or for group events with less than 50 registered participants. The fee is $100 for events sponsored by county groups with 50 or more registered participants, and $200 for events sponsored by non-resident groups with 50 or more registered participants.

To reserve the ring, contact Nottingham Park, R2, Nottingham, PA 19362, (215) 932-9195.

SPERRY NEW HOLLAND

Dry weather in parts of the state is causing severe damage to newly planted broadleaf and narrowleaf evergreens. Residents of the droughty areas should water evergreens planted within the last five years, says University of Delaware extension agricultural agent Derby Walker.

Young evergreens must go into winter in good condition, Walker explains. If not, their chances of survival decrease. Evergreens use moisture year-round. When moisture is in short supply in the fall, young plants are likely to be desiccated by winter winds.

Older plants in good condition can often survive a dry spell, Walker says. But broadleaf and narrowleaf evergreens under five years old generally have not yet established root systems adequate to support the plants in dry conditions. That's why they should be watered now.

Mulching will help protect the root system and provide plants with a layer of organic matter that will hold moisture in the soil. Mulching also helps control weeds. But too much mulch around the base of a plant can keep the trunk overly moist, allowing fungi to enter.

Walker says a windscreen of burlap or plastic will help keep winter's winds from desiccating the leaves of sensitive plants such as camellia, rhododendron and cherry laurel. However, be sure the windscreen does not touch the plants.

Another way to protect these sensitive plants is with an antidesiccant spray, which reduces the amount of water lost by the leaves. The spray must be reapplied approximately once a month. Although either method will do the job, Walker prefers the windscreen approach.

Broadleaf and narrowleaf evergreens can be planted now, but they will need water and winter protection. Many people make the mistake of planting too deep, causing the roots to suffocate. Walker says it's better to have the rootball extend slightly above the soil line and to cover the top with organic mulch. This way the root system will seek its own level and won't suffocate under too much soil.

During the height of winter, give evergreens additional protection by removing heavy snow from the boughs, and by melting icy sidewalks with fertilizer instead of salt.

In the spring, fertilize newly planted evergreens, and keep them well watered for the next five years.

Gourds are popular in fall decorations

NEWARK, Del. — Ornamental gourds are interesting relatives of the squashes. They are useful in a number of ways, but their most popular use is for fall and winter decoration, says University of Delaware extension garden specialist Dave Tatnall.

Gourds come in a great variety of sizes and shapes, with solid colors and combinations of orange, yellow, green, and white. Their descriptive names are interesting too – ball, egg, pear, spoon, dipper, bottle, dolphin, Turk's turban, and Hercules club, to name just a few.

Tatnall says to pick gourds from the vines when fully mature, and before frost. When ripe, the stems turn brown and begin to shrivel. Remove each fruit with a hand pruner, leaving a short stem piece attached.

Handle the fruits with care to avoid bruising and scratching. Wipe each fruit with a cloth dampened with rubbing alcohol to remove dirt and decay-causing organisms.

Cure gourds in a dry, airy place such as a screened porch, garage, or shed. Spread them evenly so they do not touch. Turn the fruits daily and discard any that shrivel or develop soft spots.

The entire curing process takes three to four weeks, says Tatnall. When completely dry, the gourds will have a hard, tough skin. Apply a regular floor or furniture wax, and polish with a soft cloth. Well-cured gourds will remain attractive for several months.

The fall and winter holiday seasons are ideal times for displaying decorative gourds. They are especially attractive in a fruit bowl, cornucopia, or in a loose arrangement on a table, chest, or mantel.

Gourds make an effective display when combined with other natural or artificial fruits, dried flowers, bittersweet, and decorative cones and seed pods. For more stability, use small wads of floral clay to attach the gourds to the container or to each other.

You may wish to save seeds from ornamental gourds to plant next year. Because of cross-pollination, new and interesting forms may result.

Save seeds from fully mature fruits, Tatnall says. Separate the seeds from the pulp and spread thinly on newspapers or paper towels to dry thoroughly. Then store in marked envelopes in a dry, moderately cool place until needed.

Lebanon County honors 4-H leaders and volunteers

BY DONNA McCONAUGHEY
Staff Correspondent

LEBANON — Lebanon County 4-H leaders, volunteers, and friends of 4-H were honored recently at the annual 4-H Recognition Banquet.

These 4-H supporters were honored by their peers and Extension staff. In addition to certificates of appreciation, 4-H gifts and leader's pins were presented.

Several financial supporters, "Friends of 4-H", were also recognized for their important contribution to the Lebanon County 4-H program.

"Letie" Schadler, County Extension Director, had a special word of thanks for the spouses and families of 4-H volunteers who frequently "must fend for themselves and serve as 'Go-Fers'" because of the time donated to 4-H.

The recognition of volunteers was highlighted by the presentation of a gold clover pin with a diamond to Mrs. Luke Hostetter of the Happy Variety Club for twenty years as a 4-H leader, and a gold clover pin with an emerald to Mrs. Charles Lineaweaver of the Campbelltown 4-H club for 25 years of service.

Entertainment for the evening was provided by Petrus Veldt, IFYE participant from the Netherlands. Pete is currently staying with the Mary and Lee Smith family of Myerstown.

Pete comes from a farm of 120 acres. This farm is unique in that it is "reclaimed land." Not reclaimed in the sense of coal mines — but, reclaimed from the sea. In the Netherlands dams are built and the water pumped off to make more land for this densely-populated country.

The Veldt's farm actually lies below sea level. Although 70 percent of the agriculture in the Netherlands is dairy farming, Pete's family is involved in the growing of sugar beets, onions and potatoes.

In the Netherlands many barns are built of glass — a very economical building product. Economical only if you don't back into it with a tractor, however.

Pete concluded his presentation by giving high recommendations to the IFYE program.

The Recognition Banquet was concluded with the presentation of Lebanon county's Fall 4-H Fundraiser. Mrs. Kay Taylor presented the Penn Best, Pennsylvania Agriculture Products which will be sold during October and November. This program is part of PFA's efforts to market Pennsylvania products.

The motto to be highlighted during this fundraiser is "Favor Your Neighbor — Buy Pennsylvania Food."

Lebanon County 4-H Leaders receiving special recognition were Mrs. Charles Lineaweaver (left) with 25 years of service, and Mrs. Luke Hostetter with 20 years of service. They are joined by Linda Seigel, 4-H agent, who is sharing with them the Penn Best products Lebanon County 4-H will be selling as a fundraiser.

Cholesterol is essential to proper body functions

NEWARK, Del. — Everyone has heard of cholesterol, but few understand what it really is, says University of Delaware extension home economist Claudia Holden. Cholesterol is not a fat but a sterol, or waxy, fat-like substance that is a normal part of blood, tissues and cells.

The body needs cholesterol to make important hormones like estrogen and progesterone. The liver converts cholesterol into bile acids, which are needed for digesting fats. Cholesterol also aids in the formation of vitamin D when direct sunlight strikes the skin.

The body produces some of its own cholesterol-about 1,000 milligrams a day. The rest is supplied by food, with the amount varying greatly depending on kind and quantity eaten.

Holden says the amount of cholesterol in the diet is related to the amount in the blood. Some cholesterol is always circulating in the serum of our blood to be transported to the cells of the body. A doctor can measure the level of serum cholesterol to determine if it is too high.

An ordinary diet supplies more than 600 milligrams of cholesterol a day beyond the amount produced by the body, Holden says. A low cholesterol diet supplies about 300 milligrams daily. There is evidence that when serum cholesterol is high, some may be deposited as fatty streaks along the inner walls of arteries. These fatty deposits harden, clogging the linings of arteries and eventually restricting blood flow. As the lining of an artery narrows, pressure from normal blood flow increases. Eventually the artery may become completely clogged. When an artery supplying blood to the brain becomes clogged, a stroke occurs. When a clogged artery is connected to the heart, a heart attack may result.

Holden says the amount of serum cholesterol in the blood is influenced by the types of dietary fat consumed. Saturated fats such as those in animal fats, organ meats, coconut and palm oils tend to raise cholesterol levels. Polyunsaturated fats such as those in corn, cottonseed, soybean and safflower oils tend to lower serum cholesterol by helping the body eliminate excess cholesterol. Monounsatured fat, another type, is neutral, neither raising nor lowering serum cholesterol. Cholesterol is found only in foods of animal origin. It is not present in vegetables, fruits, cereals, legumes, nuts or foods that are made from plants, unless animal fat is added.

The highest concentrations of cholesterol are found in egg yolks and in organ meats — brains, liver, kidney, heart, sweetbreads, gizzards. Fish and other foods of animal origin contain lesser amounts.

You can take several steps to lower cholesterol in your diet, Holden says. Choose lean cuts of meat and trim off visible fat. Use egg whites in desserts, and unsaturated oils in meal preparation. Read labels for the cholesterol level of various products.

Exercising, giving up smoking, and maintaining ideal weight will often help lower cholesterol levels, and will reduce the risk of heart attack and stroke.

Cholesterol-lowering drugs are available for those who have difficulty lowering cholesterol through methods described above. But some of these drugs are controversial and cause side effects, Holden cautions.

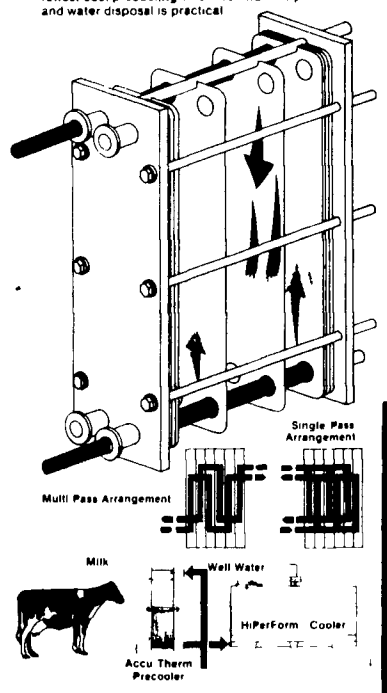
Mr. Dairyman If You Are Interested In Saving Energy Or If You Are Having A Cooling Problem, Please Call us For A No Obligation Demonstration

The Mueller Accu-Therm™ Precooler

...uses well water to precool your warm milk before it goes into your milk cooler!

In seconds 100 degree milk is cooled to within 15 to 20 degrees of well water temperature. Milk flows between every other stainless steel heat exchanger plate while well water flows in the opposite direction on the other side of these plates cooling the milk. Choose Accu Therm for lowest cost precooling when well water is plentiful and water disposal is practical.



FOUR REASONS WHY YOU SHOULD HAVE A MUELLER ACCU-THERM PRECOOLER ON YOUR FARM!

1 Reduces Energy Cost
Milk from the cow is about 100 degrees F. Precooling milk by 20 degrees shortens the time the milk cooler refrigeration system must operate by one third. Precooling warm milk by 30 degrees will cut your milk refrigeration system operation in half. A Mueller Accu Therm lowers your energy costs and reduces your operation expenses.

2 Flexibility
The Accu Therm is available in wall mounted or floor models to fit any milking operation or space restriction. As your dairy operation grows, Accu Therm can be easily adapted to increased volume by adding heat exchanger plates. This is a simple job requiring only a hand wrench and a few minutes and does not require moving the Accu Therm.

3 Low Maintenance
The Accu Therm Plate Heat Exchanger is a closed system and can be quickly and efficiently cleaned in place with the rest of the milking system.

4 Pays For Itself
The money you save in reduced energy costs will soon repay your investment in a Mueller Accu Therm milk precooler. For example: with 60 degree F. well water for cooling, milk temperature is lowered by 20 degrees and energy requirements are reduced one third. The typical 5 HP milk cooler condensing unit uses approximately 5 kilowatts per hour of electricity.

Ida's Notebook

Ida Risser

I ve been reading my mother's 1907 diary lately and it is interesting to see how things have changed. She was attending a two-room school in Oregon and tells of events in her life that fall of 1907.

Many of the boys did not come to school until October as they had to work on the farm. When the teacher got married the children had a day off. One day the students spend an afternoon in the woods hunting chestnuts. Their school had 30 library books which made her happy as she loved to read.

She was sent to the mill for flour as they used a lot to bake bread for five people. Her mother bought oysters from the fish man that stopped at their house. And, as they lived in a small village, my mother was sent to the butcher for meat and to a relative two miles away for butter. Her brother brought one-half bushel of apples home which cost him forty-five cents. They had their own chickens and she carefully noted the number of eggs that she gathered each day.

She tells of a neighbor's baby dying and of her nephew falling against the kitchen stove. They tied lily leaves on the gash on his forehead. An aunt died of tetanus when she fell from an apple tree and they borrowed a surrey to drive to the funeral.

On Sundays they walked to the small church in the village. In fact, practically everywhere that they went, they walked. Whether it was to visit friends or to attend a community picnic in a nearby woods. She mentions the muddy roads and tells of walking over three miles to a trolley.

There was a lot of visiting among relatives. And one highlight was a "doll party" at a friend's home. She also mentions getting a post card that told of a "handkerchief surprise" and how she sent a white one that she had embroidered.

In November their pump froze and they had to melt snow for water. She had a sleigh ride and her mother promised to have two ducks for Christmas dinner. They set up the stove in the livingroom and had fourteen at the dinner table. Their school teacher gave each of them a post card at Christmas.

Her mother cooked soap, made sauerkraut and took a tubful of celery to market. It surely sounds like a busy and interesting life.

Follow safety tips when operating kerosene heaters

NEWARK, Del. — As days and nights grow cooler, sales of kerosene heaters are booming once again. These appliances are dangerous when used carelessly, reminds Delaware extension garden and home improvement agent Dr. Willie G. Adams, so keep the following points in mind:

- Make sure the heater you choose meets safety standards established by the Underwriters Laboratories, PFS Corporation, or Japan Heating Appliances Inspection Association, Inc.
- Keep the carton your heater comes in for out-of-season storage, or use a large, vinyl household trash can to protect it from dust and dirt.
- Read and follow the manufacturer's guidelines for the care and operation of your heater.
- Remember that good fuel means good performance. Use only K-1 kerosene.
- Store kerosene in a cool, dry place, away from direct sunlight and out of children's reach.
- Never add fuel while your heater is operating or hot.
- When filling the heater, never set the kerosene can lower than the heating tank.
- The wick is the most critical part of the heater. Follow the owner's manual for specific care instructions.
- Never trim a fiberglass wick.
- Never place your heater within three feet of combustible material such as furniture, draperies or clothing.
- Never leave the heater burning unattended. Turn it off before leaving the house or going to sleep.
- Always use the heater in a well ventilated area to avoid risk of asphyxiation.
- Never allow children to operate or refuel the heater.
- Don't use the heater as a dryer.
- Never use a portable kerosene heater in a moving vehicle.

Fad-dieters usually regain lost weight

COLLEGE PARK, Md. — The estimated four out of every ten Americans now on diets are losing ground in their battle to lose inches.

A full 95 percent of all dieters who lose weight will regain the pounds they have struggled to shed within a year, according to University of Maryland Extension nutritionist Dorothy VanZandt, an expert on diets.

Their short-lived success, says VanZandt, is a direct result of the fad-diet siege that has held Americans hostage ever since the "thin-is-in" mentality exploded in the early '60's.

"Weight-obsessed Americans are searching for the 'magic bullet' — an easy, quick cure for obesity," explains VanZandt. "Unfortunnately, weight rapidly lost is inevitably weight rapidly put back on."

Statistically, your odds of keeping off weight are highest if you lose no more than two pounds a week, says VanZandt. Speedier weight loss may satisfy the ego, but only temporarily.

Other tips on long-term weight loss include:

—Start a food diary before beginning your diet. Make a list of everything you eat for one week, and note the times you are most likely to binge. Cut our "luxury foods" with empty calories such as sauces, sweets, and excess starches, and try to plan activities during the intervals you are most likely to succumb to temptation.

—Make sure you have a well-rounded, varied diet, and don't skip meals. You're sure to overcompensate when you do permit yourself food.

—Food consumed 30 to 60 minutes before a meal tends to dull the appetite. Try a small bowl of consomme or fresh vegetables before lunch and dinner.

—Don't begin a second bite of food until you have completely chewed and swallowed the first onw. Put your fork down after every third bite, and try taking one or two-minute breaks during your meal. Most overweight people rush their meals.

—Don't be a food martyr. Treat yourself to an occasional (once weekly) payoff, for being good most of the time. Such strategy is a trade-off: it can take the foreverness out of dieting.

—Exercise, in addition to cutting back on calories. Brisk walking for 30 minutes every day without any change in food habits will burn off ten pounds yearly.

Proper handling important when drying herbs

WEST CHESTER — Home-dried herbs can be just as tasty as those you buy at the store. They do; however, require proper handling from garden to herb jar.

Trudy Doughtery, extension home economist, has these suggestions for drying your herb bounty.

Most herbs are at their peak of flavor just before flowering, so this is a good time to collect them for drying and storage. To be certain, check drying directions on specific herbs in a reliable reference book. Cut herbs early in the morning, just after the dew has dried. Annuals should be cut at ground level and perennials about one-third down the main stem, including the side branches.

Wash herbs, with the leaves on the stems, lightly in cold running water to remove any soil, dust, bugs or other foreign material.

Drain thoroughly on absorbent towels or hang plants upside down in the sun until the water evaporates.

Strip leaves off the stalks once plants have drained and dried, leaving only the top 6 inches. Remove all blossoms.

Herbs must be thoroughly dried before storing. High moisture content herbs, such as mint and basil, need rapid drying or they will mold. To retain some green leaf coloring, dry in the dark by hanging plants upside down in bunches in paper bags. Hanging leaves down allows essential oils to flow from stems to leaves. Tie whole stems very tightly in small bunches of 6 to 8 stems - individual stems will shrink and fall.

Hang in a dark, warm, well-ventilated, dust-free area. Leaves are ready when they feel dry and crumbly — in about 1 to 2 weeks.

Store in airtight containers away from the light.

Herbs can also be dried in a dehydrator, convection oven or microwave oven. They can also be frozen.

Ag export group named

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Edward Andersen, Master of the National Grange, has been nominated to serve on the newly established National Commission on Agricultural Trade and Export Policy.

The recently signed bill creating the commission calls for 20 seats on the commission to be reserved for producers, representatives of farm organizations, commodity groups and other industries affected by agriculture-related trade and export policies. The commission is charged with examining current and potential U.S. policies and programs which affect agricultural trade and export practices.

Andersen said the commission will have an initial report in time for hearings on the 1985 farm bill next March and a final, more comprehensive report no later than July 1986. The group met informally on Thurs., Oct. 4 to appoint a steering committee to assess and review the working structure of the commission.

Andersen said the Grange gave strong support to the creation of the commission because, "We believe it can make recommendations which would improve the export of agricultural commodities to the benefit of U.S. farmers and our national economy."

Andersen, who is head of one of the nation's largest farm organizations, is also a farmer from Waterloo, Neb. He has served on numerous trade advisory committees and has been a strong supporter of legislative and Administrative actions to improve agricultural exports. Under his direction the Grange has become a leading agriculture spokesman against legislation that would be disruptive to world trade in agricultural commodities. He firmly believes that the long-term development of agricultural exports is vital to the economic well-bing of U.S. farmers and that most trade issues have an impact on farmers opportunities for increased exports.

Bean loan rate set

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The final loan and purchase rate for 1984-crop soybeans will be $5.02 per bushel, the same as the preliminary rate announced earlier and the minimum permitted by law, according to a U.S. Department of Agriculture official.

Everett Rank, administrator of USDA's Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service, said all producers of 1984-crop soybeans will be eligible for loans and purchases since USDA does not require farmers to take part in production adjustment programs as a condition of eligibility.

Rank said current law provides for the loan rate to be at a level equal to 75 percent of the simple average price received by farmers during the past five years, excluding the high year and the low year. However, the loan rate may not be set at less than $5.02 per bushel.

Can U.S. be reawakened to wearing wool?

WASHINGTON, D.C. — In the world of fibers, wool is generally recognized as good looking and long lasting. You can always depend on wool clothing for warmth in winter. The problem for U.S. wool growers is that most Americans don't.

The use of wool has declined dramatically since the turn of the century. Of course, the fiber is not alone. Declining use has been a common thread among all natural fibers, according to Agriculture Department economist Keith Collins of the Economic Research Service. Collins' analysis of the wool situation is presented in a recent issue of the Department's FARMLINE magazine.

Together, wool and cotton accounted for virtually all of the fibers used in the early 1900's. In 1950, they accounted for 80 percent. Today's combined total, says Collins, is only around 30 percent, and most of that is cotton.

Disappearing wool

The wool statistics speak for themselves: Its share slid from 40 percent of total fiber use in 1900 to 10 percent in 1950 and only 2 percent last year. In raw numbers, U.S. wool production dropped from 249 million pounds in 1950 to about 100 million in 1983. The success of manmade fibers and the general consumer neglect of sheep meat share the blame.

In terms of fiber, consumers have happily accepted nylon, polyester, and acrylic in place of, or in blends with, wool. The reasons are performance and price.

Althougha pair of wool trousers won't wrinkle, it will lose its shape. It usually has to be dry cleaned and can shrink if cleaned improperly. Insect damage, particularly from moths, is a possibility if wool garments aren't protected. Manmade fibers offer drip-dry washing, no shrinkage, and no possibility of moth damage.

Manmade fibers

Manmade fibers have also been considerably cheaper. Prices for clean, fine, territory wool averaged about 3½ times more than those for polyester staple during the late 1970's. Rising prices for manmade fibers, along with failling prices for wool, have since narrowed the gap, Collins says, but producers aren't flocking into the sheep business.

In fact, the nation's herd size has been cut by 80 percent since World War II as procuers have faced increasing competition, eroding demand, and rising costs of production for both their wool and their meat products.

The deciding factor in the herd decline may have been the meat. After all, even with manmade fibers, consumers would be wearing more wool than they do if there were more sheep. The trouble is that mutton and lamb meat, which account for around 70 percent of the average producer's returns, have never really caught on as a significant part of the American diet.

Mutton taste dwindles

If anything, our taste for these meats has dwindled. In 1930, lamb and mutton accounted for 6 of the 190 pounds of meat consumed per person in the United States. This [illegible] to 2.9 out of 200 pounds in 1970. And, last year, it was only 1.5 out of 210 pounds.

The production base reflects these trends: Sheep numbers dropped from the record 56 million head in 1942 to only 11.8 million last year. This year's herd count is down to 11.4 million, the lowest on record, with another 5-percent decline forecast for 1985.

Not surprisingly, last year's wool crop was the smallest since 1909, with a total production of only 100.3 million pounds. This year's output will probably be about the same.

Fleece wool

The majority of production — about 75 percent — comes from the "territory" wool states, consisting of Texas, South Dakota, the Rocky Mountain states, and Pacific Coast states. Most other sheep are produced in Virginia, West Virginia, Pennsylvania, Michigan, New England, and the Great Plains. These are commonly referred to as the "fleece" wool states. Each region's name also describes the type of wool produced there.

In terms of grade, territory wool is finer, generally used to make better quality apparel. Fleece wool is a medium-grade fiber that's manufactured into coats, blankets, and sweaters.

Just as wool from each region differs, production characteristics and problems differ as well.

In the territory wool states, flocks are large, ranging from 150 to 400 head or more. Thirty years ago, it was common for a producer to have several thousand head of sheep out on the range. These

Ag credit receives priority

WASHINGTON, D.C. — President Reagan's farm credit initiatives will be the highest priority of every employee of the USDA's Farmers Home Administration, Administrator Charles W. Shuman, said.

The plan, announced Sept. 18 as a transitional program, is designed to help farmers caught in the cost-price squeeze who are experiencing severe financial stress but who show promise of success with an extra economic boost.

Under the plan, the Farmers Home Administration will:

— Reschedule up to 25 percent of a qualifying farmer's loan, to a maximum of $100,000, for as long as five years with no interest payments.

— Guarantee a non-FmHA borrower's farm loan if the lender is willing to write off a minimum of 10 percent of the loan, up to the amount necessary to achieve a positive cash flow for the borrower.

"The part under control of the Farmers Home Administration, the rescheduling, will be the number one priority of everyone in the agency," Shuman said.

"Special project managers are being appointed in the national office to see that all the necessary regulation changes and instructions to our field offices are completed immediately," he said. "We will begin examining loan dockets within a matter of weeks so that this part of the program can be underway by Jan. 1."

Shuman said the necessary steps to implement the guarantee portion will be taken in ample time to meet the spring lending season.

As another part of the President's initiative, the Farmers Home Administration will contract with local farm financial and management experts to help prepare and analyze credit statements and loan applications in order to speed loan processing. In some states private lending firms will service the loans under contract with USDA.

Western problems

The western range presents a unique set of problems:

• Predators, mainly coyotes and wild dogs, are a major problem. Bears, mountain lions, foxes, and eagles add to the death loss. Some western producers lose 20 to 30 percent of their flocks every year, according to the American Sheep Producers Council.

• Hired labor is costly and hard to find. Sheepherding is a demanding job because of rugged living conditions and loneliness. Western herds are generally moved twice a year and need the constant presence of a shepherd.

• Weather has been a particularly serious problem this year. A late winter snow storm took a large toll on herds in Utah, South Dakota, Wyoming, Montana, and Idaho. In Wyoming, producers lost 22 percent of their breeding ewes. In some parts of Texas, the third stright year of drought has forced flock liquidations.

In most fleece wool states, competition for land tends to be greater, and average flock size is much smaller, less than 50 head. Sheep are usually only a small part of the farming operation. Also, producers don't ordinarily have access to organized marketing efforts like their larger western counterparts. They are more likely to market their products directly to consumers. Predators — more commonly wild dogs, but sometimes coyotes — pose similar problems in the East.

The future?

Despite the differences, producers in both regions face a similar question. With so many lows, is there a future for domestic sheep and wool?

According to USDA's Collins, the answer is a definitive "yes." Although sheep numbers have continued to decline, the rate has slowed considerably since 1980, and much of the recent slippage is related to weather conditions — not further drops in demand. Domestic demand and U.S. mill use have both strengthened in 1983 and 1984.

But, he cautions, that "while the wool industry appears to have stabilized and some small improvement in fiber market shares is possible, it isn't likely to be significant."

Use in blends

For now, wool's best prospect appears to be in blends. Consumers can expect to see wool blends in many more textile products, especially in clothing, according to Anne Dolan, a spokeswomen for the American Sheep Producers Council in Denver.

Fashion is one of the major factors that affects the demand for wool. Others are relative fiber prices, price variability, and overall economic activity.

"Current fashion trends are promising," Dolan says. Starting in 1980, manufacturers began using slightly more wool in garments. "It was really in response to consumers," she explains. Consumers were buying fewer but higher quality items. "Slightly higher levels of wool in textile blends give the fabric the long-wearing quality manufacturers were after," Dolan says.

Import competition

Wool may wear well, but manmade fibers still have the edge in price, and wool imports still provide stiff competition.

Prices for wool are sensitive to the forces that affect sheep numbers: demand and prices for lamb and mutton; biological time lags in production; and twice-a-year shearings. In addition, half the wool used in U.S. mills is imported, so changes in foreign production and demand can also cause substantial swings in U.S. prices.

In contrast, manmade fiber production is constant and consistent. The quality of the product does not vary much, and foreign supply and demand fluctations have very little effect on U.S. Manmade fiber prices because almost all the manmade fibers used by U.S. mills are produced domestically.

"Many mills dislike price variability even more than they dislike high but stable prices," Collins says. However, he adds, today's mill demand is probably less sensitive to price than when manmade fiber were rapidly being adopted. Desirable blend levels have been achieved, and there are simply fewer products for manmade fibers to penetrate.

As for overall demand, the use of wool and all fibers increases when the economy is growing. However, the same is true of imports.

Wool imports — mostly from Australia and New Zealand — have grown because the quality is high and prices are competitive with U.S. prices, even after duties are paid. The strength of the U.S. dollar has contributed to the surge in U.S. imports. Australia produces considerable amounts of merino wool, a specialty fiber used in expensive apparel.

Higher prices are anticipated for imported wool in the mid-to-late 1980's, according to Collins, because of an expected weakening of the American dollar and an improvement in the economies of the major wool-importing countries. This is good news for American producers who will probably receive higher prices as well, especially if demand holds up.

Made in America

Whatever the import price trend, the American Sheep Producers Council does not intend to allow imports to reap all the benefits of any pickup in demand. Education is a top priority for this industry group. Their current campaign — "Made In America From American Wool" — is an educational and promotional program designed to reach everyone in the marketing chain from grower to consumer.

There's definitely a "buy American" feeling in the country right now, according to the council's Anne Dolan. "And we want to educate the public about American wool. Many people don't even realize that wool is produced in this country, and even many of those who do, don't realize ours is amoung the finest quality produced anywhere in the world."

At the retail level, product labels and hang-tags, printed with the industry's new slogan, will help identify home-grown products, including some that are making first-time appearances in the marketplace.

Through a joint effort with brand-name manufacturers, the council has developed several products that are manufactured here using domestic wool, including blankets, uniforms, and upholstery materials. Thirty years ago, these products were almost always made from wool, but in today's marekt it's a rarity.

What does all this mean to producers?

It gives them an opportunity that they have not had before, according to producer Edgar Olson, who serves on the wool committee of the American Sheep Producers Council.

"With the commitments from several major mills and the advertising program run by the council, producers will get more exposure with consumers than we've had in decades," Olson says. "Now it's up to us to produce the best quality wool we possibly can."

Select hybrids with care

MINNEAPOLIS — Few decisions are as critical to the corn grower as the selection of the right hybrids for his farm and management practices, according to Stuart Carney, agronomy services manager for PAG Seeds.

"Making the right choices demands a carefully planned selection process that requires time and effort," he says. "This is because different corn hybrids vary in their genetic ability to respond to different soils, plant populations, moisture conditions and management programs. They also differ in their ability to cope with stresses caused by high temperatures, drought, insects, leaf and stalk diseases and other adverse growing conditions.

"In the final analysis, it's harvestable yield — not just yield potential — that's the real objective of hybrid selection," says Carney. He advises that farmers carefully evaluate the following hybrid characteristics when making selections.

• Maturity. Full-season hybrids for a given geographic area generally offer the greatest yield potential. But planting all of your crop to one full-season hybrid may not be a wise decision, Carney observes.

"Planting several hybrids with a range of maturity from medium to late provides the best protection from seasonal stresses such as high temperatures during pollination or extreme moisture shortages," he says. "This also spreads out the harvest season."

• Stalk quality. Select hybrids that exhibit good standability over several years, Carney advises.

"Don't base your opinion of stalk quality on results at one location for one year. Stalk quality is highly influenced by the environment in which the hybrid is grown," he says.

Carney also points out that there are differences in how hybrids respond to the timing of influences such as heat, drought, excessive moisture, competition from high plant population and fertility levels.

• Disease tolerance. The most practical approach is to observe the hybrids of your choice at several locations for the presence or absence of leaf diseases common to your area, says Carney.

"There's no reason to eliminate a top-quality hybrid because of its susceptibility to a disease that's not of economic importance in the area. Producers should learn to recognize the diseases that are prevalent in their geographic areas," he states.

"Take notes based on your personal observations of hybrids. Avoid the common mistake of attempting to predict future hybrid performance on limited date or on a one-time, one-location observation. Study data from adjacent areas or from county or state performance trials. And study hybrid descriptions and date published by seed companies," Carney advises.

Cool Season Grasses - How Well Do You Know Them?

Most of us take our cool season, perennial forage grasses for granted. We sow them, abuse them, fail to fertilize or manage them, and then we expect them to be there when we need them. And if they don't perform well in July and August we criticize them.

In fact grasses are extremely important to us. On a worldwide basis grasses are included in nearly three fourths of the cultivated forage cropland and they make up a major portion of the native rangeland. In the U.S. alone there are some 1500 grass species. They're extremely important as food crops, and are used extensively for pasture, hay, silage, soil conservation, turf and wildlife.

Most perennial grasses grown for forage in the Northeast are classified as cool season grasses, i.e. they require a cool, moist climate for optimum growth. As a group they are not extremely drought or heat tolerant - and they do require cool temperatures and relatively long days to flower. And unless our summers are cool and moist these grasses don't normally produce well during the months of July and August.

But they are multi-harvest perennials, and the relationship between growth and food reserves in cool season grasses is similar to that in alfalfa and other perennial species. It's true the food storage organs of these grasses are not as extensive as those of alfalfa and red clover. And instead of roots the main food storage organs are rhizones or stem bases. This means, of course, that for best results management of grasses can be just as important as management of legumes.

Cool season grasses can be grown alone or in mixtures with legumes. When grown alone they require adequate levels of phosphorous and potash for good growth. And, of course, they require and respond well to nitrogen fertilization.

In today's column let's take a brief look at just two of these cool season grasses to see where they fit and how best you can make them more useful in your forage program

Kentucky bluegrass is one of the oldest grass species known and certainly one of the most widely grown, but most maligned, grasses in the Northeast. A low growing and relatively low yielding grass, forage wise its use is limited mainly to permanent pastures where it is normally grazed continuously and seldom fertilized or managed. It does have a shallow root system developing from rhizones and it will not tolerate heat, drought or poor soil. But it is winter hardy and will maintain its nutritive value longer than will most other cool-season grasses.

Kentucky bluegrass is highly acceptable to all classes of livestock and certainly is one of the easiest grasses to manage. Horses relish it and bluegrass is the primary component of most horse pasture mixtures.

The overall production of many old permanent bluegrass pastures can be doubled or tripled by complete fertilization or by renovation to include a legume such as birdsfoot trefoil or clover.

Currently there are no improved varieties of Kentucky bluegrass developed specifically for forage purposes, although Dormie is said to have superior pasture characteristics. However, several of the newer turf type varieties such as Park are suitable for pasture.

Until relatively recently Perennial ryegrass was not considered a suitable cool-season grass for the Northeast. But with the introduction of moderately winter-hardy varieties this species is finding a new home, especially in southern New York state, Pennsylvania and points south.

A bunch grass, in contrast to the rhizones produced by Kentucky bluegrass, perennial ryegrass is somewhat taller growing and more productive than bluegrass. It is exceptionally palatable and nutritious as either pasture or hay and is relished by all classes of livestock. It grows well in mixtures with alfalfa, birdsfoot trefoil and the clovers and seems to survive our winters satisfactorily when grown with a legume. However, until more winter-hardy varieties become available we do not recommend that it be grown alone

Currently Reveille is the most widely grown variety in this area, heading out some 2 weeks later than Grimalda. However, plant

Is there enough farmland available?

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Questions about whether the United States has enough farmland for future food and fiber production haven't faded away. They've just receded into the background, upstaged by today's concerns over crop surpluses and farm financial conditions.

To Robert Boxley, the "production capacity" issue in agriculture is as important as it ever was for two reasons: the potential for price-depressing surpluses in the years ahead and the uncertainties for the decades beyond. Boxley is a natural resource economist with the Agriculture Department's Economic Research Service, and his focus is on land.

"Overall," he says, "the evidence suggests that we now have substantial untapped capacity to boost food production by bringing more land into production and by using our land more intensively."

Resource survey

Some of the evidence comes from recently compiled results of the 1982 National Resources Inventory, one of USDA's most extensive surveys ever on the nation's soil and water resources. The study identifies 421 million acres of U.S. cropland. Not all this acreage is planted. USDA analysts estimate that about 387 million acres were actually used for crops in 1982, the year before PIK and other cropland diversion programs took 82 million acres temporarily out of production.

Should more land be needed, the available acreage may be even greater than those figures indicate. Based on physical land characteristics in 1981 price relationships, 153 million acres nationwide are considered to have a high or medium potential for conversion to crop use.

Intense use

Boxley also notes a continuing trend toward more intensive use of farmland. He points to reductions in crop failure rates, more double-cropped acreage, and increased use of irrigation, especially supplemental irrigation in the eastern United States.

Before 1958, crop failure generally took more than 10 million acres a year out of production. Between 1958 and 1982, only 7.2 million acres a year, on average, were lost, but that "may be near the practical minimum," he says.

In contrast, double-cropping and supplemental irrigation may still hold considerable potential for gaining additional output. In 1982, 14 million acres were double-cropped, compared with just 5 million acres in 1972. Some projections indicate that about 22 million acres will be double-cropped by 1992.

Roger Hexem, a USDA land use specialist, notes that a major factor in the recent growth of double-cropping is the increasingly common practice of planting soybeans following winter wheat. Twenty-two states report at least some double-cropping of soybeans. A third to a half of total soybean acreage is double-cropped in some areas.

"Double-cropping requires good soil moisture conditions and careful management, but there are no apparent physical constraints to further expansion of double-cropping in the South and even in more northerly states," Hexem says.

He credits recent expansion to: faster maturing plant varieties; the growing use of minimum-till and no-till practices that permit immediate reseeding after harvest; artificial crop drying technology that allows earlier harvests; machinery that speeds up seedbed preparation; greater use of herbicides and pesticides; and the role of supplemental irrigation in assuring rapid seed germination.

Irrigation

Supplemental irrigation raises another possibility of getting more out of the land by avoiding plant stress and yield loss during critical stages of plant growth. The use of irrigation in the 31 humid eastern states (from Minnesota to Louisiana and eastward) has grown steadily, although the total acreage is still not large. In 1978, nearly 7 million acres were irrigated in this area, up 2.8 million acres since 1969.

Researchers contend that irrigation will probably become increasingly common in water-abundant areas.

"From the vantage point of the present," Boxley adds, "it is clear that some of the concerns of a few years ago were overblown. Our capacity for expanding production is much greater than we've sometimes assumed, even without major technological changes."

Is he implying that the capacity question gets too much attention? "Not at all," he answers. "Excess capacity has serious implications for farmers' returns and the policies that may be needed to assure a healthy agricultural sector."

Look ahead

He also cautions that we have to look beyond the present situation. The specter of scarcity, raised so often during the export boom years of the 1970's, could surface again. "If history teaches us anything, it should teach us not to draw long-term inferences from short-term phenomena," he says.

"Our land resources are finite and susceptible to damage if we use them unwisely. It would be a mistake to ignore questions regarding the long-term sufficiency of our land base, the costs of bringing additional land into production, and the environmental consequences of using fragile land more intensively."

Boxley urges more attention for the production capacity question so that farm and land policy decisions can seek a balance between immediate concerns and an objective assessment of our longer term needs to preserve resources for the future.

HARRISBURG — The fastest growing segment of the nursery/landscape industry is landscape maintenance.

To help provide those who work in this area with the most up-to-date information, a program on landscape management has been planned. It is scheduled to be held from noon to 6 p.m. at the Sheraton West, Harrisburg, on Tuesday, Oct. 16. The meeting, jointly sponsored by the Penn State Cooperative Extension Service, the International Society of Arboriculture, and the Pennsylvania Nurseryman's Association, will feature four speakers.

Tom Perry, from North Carolina State University, will present the results of his nationally recognized work on tree root growth and on the establishment of plants in the landscape. Dave Shetlar, a private consultant, will present a wrap-up of summer insect problems along with suggested fall and spring spray schedules.

Bobby Joyner will represent Chemlawn on the program and will discuss the use and misuse of turf herbicides. Larry Kuhns, from Penn State, will discuss the fertilization of landscape plants.

Following the educational program, the Pennsylvania Nurseryman's Association will sponsor a dinner and discussion session for all program participants.

To obtain registration information, contact: The Pennsylvania Nurserymen's Association, 234 State St., Harrisburg, PA 17101, Tel. (717) 238-1673.

Restrictive SBA loan rule eased

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Congressional conferees recently added compromise language to remove an earlier-announced restriction on Small Business Administration loans to businesses adversely affected by the government's 1983 payment-in-kind (PIK) program. The language is part of an agreement included in the pending stopgap federal funding legislation.

As previously announced, the loan rules required state governors to certify that at least 25 small businesses in a county must have suffered substantial economic injury before SBA would grant loan approval. The new language states that loan eligibility "shall not in any way be dependent upon the number of disaster victims in any county or any political subdivision."

Gary D. Myers, president, The Fertilizer Institute, hailed the congressional action, saying that the earlier rule effectively assured nonqualification for loans, "since rural areas generally have no more than five or six farm input businesses per county."

Myers noted that expansion of SBA's economic injury loan program was approved by Congress and signed into law by the President in April of this year as a direct result of cooperative industry efforts to lessen the impact of the PIK program on fertilizer and other farm supply retailers. The subsequently released rules, he said, had served to negate those efforts.

"In 1983, American farmers took 83 million acres out of production to participate in the PIK program. The effect on small farm input businesses — such as fertilizer, feed, equipment, and agrichemical dealers — was disastrous," Myers said. "For some, the impact was of such magnitude that their only alternative was to declare bankruptcy. This latest congressional action finally offers some hope to those who have most needed it."

MILLER PRO FORAGE BOX

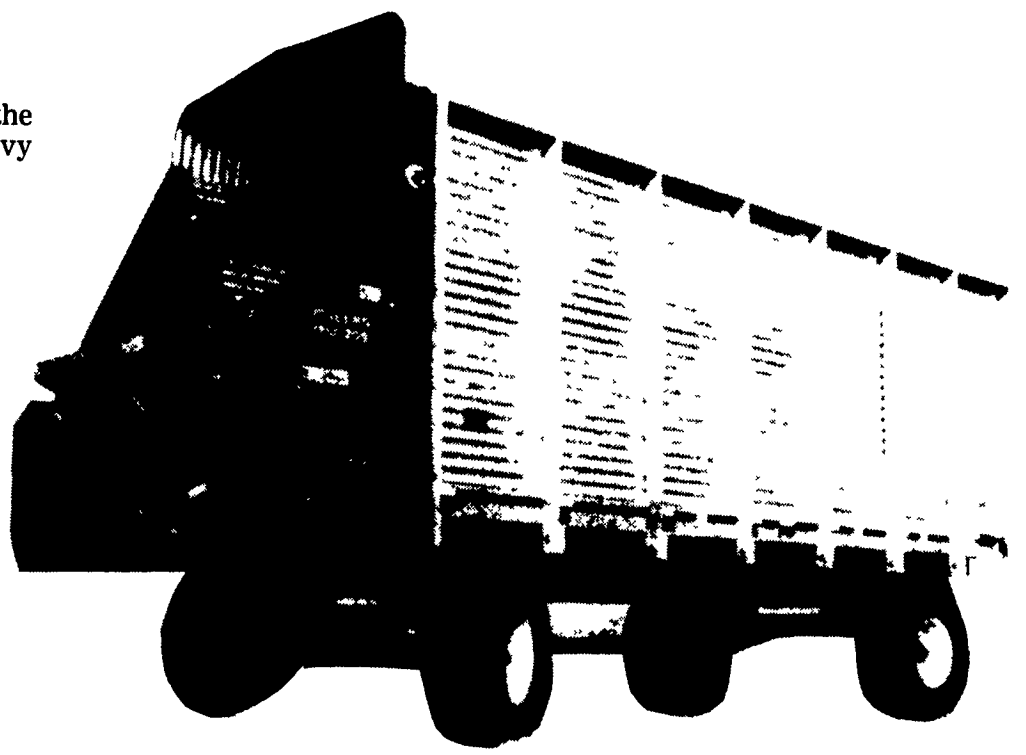
"You Just Can't Make It Better Than This!"

Ed Ranney
Route 1, Boyceville, WI
2-Miller 'Pro' 2150

"The Miller 'Pro' is the Cadillac of boxes for a Chevy price."

"The 'Pro' is the smoothest box I've ever seen. We filled a 25x80, and 30 feet in a second 25x80, and never blocked the blower with a 70 H.P. blower tractor! We kept up to the chopper with just 2 boxes!!"

Robert C. Sperber
7345 Sand Bay Rd.
Sturgeon Bay, WI
2-Miller 'Pro' 2200



"Farmers talked and Miller listened." The MILLER PRO is the result of over 20 years of forage box experience and extensive research and testing. You'll find it to be the strongest, most durable and dependable forage box on the market! Miller feels that "down time is simply not acceptable."

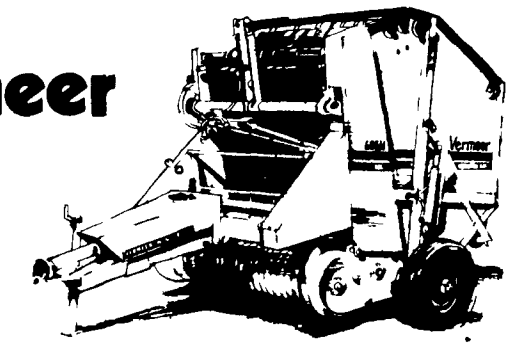
YOUR FALL TIME SAVER AND LABOR SAVER FROM VERMEER

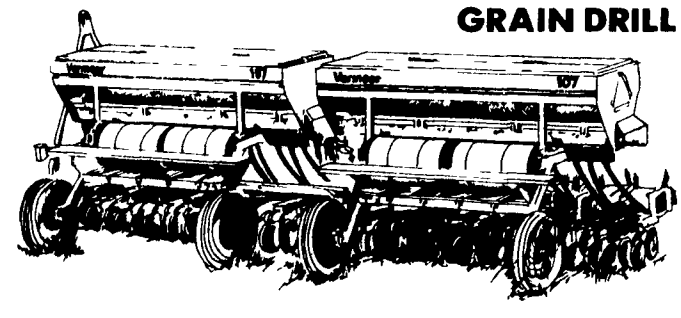
Vermeer 605 BALER



Vermeer can help you spend less time in the field. After corn harvest the Vermeer 605 and 504 Series Balers can turn that corn fodder into a package that is easy to handle and move. Solid and weather-tight the Vermeer round bale keeps its shape better than any other round bale package in the field today. And the best part, it's the most competitively priced baler in the industry.

CALL TODAY AND ASK FOR A DEMONSTRATION AND A PRICE. BALERS AND NO TILL DRILLS FOR RENT ON A LIMITED BASIS.

Vermeer 107 GRAIN DRILL



The Vermeer 107 No-Till Grain Drill gives you that important early start in seeding your fall grains. This rugged built unit gives you adjustable seed settings for any small grain with positive depth control for more even seeding. This unit has staggered double disk openers set at 7" spacings, and can be used for no till and conventional seeding.

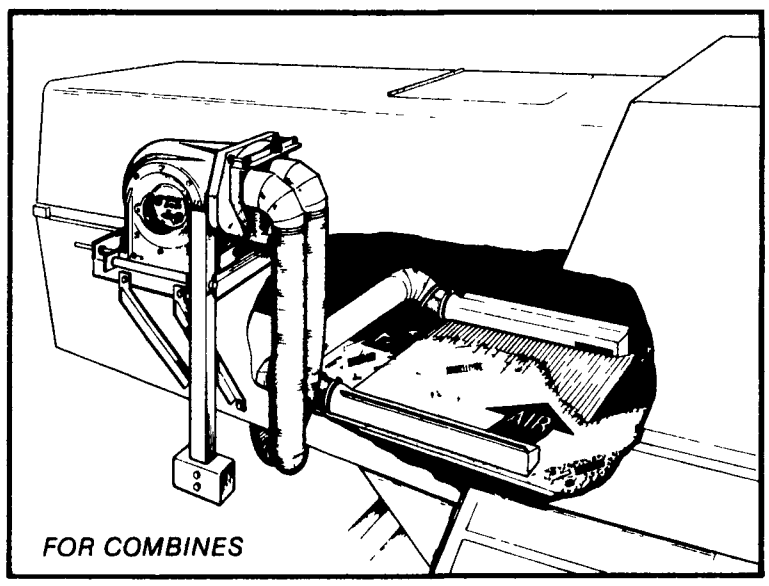
NECO GRAIN $AVER



PREVENTS LOSS OF VALUABLE GRAIN OUT THE BACK OF THE COMBINE—"PUTS YOUR PROFIT IN THE TANK! NOT ON THE GROUND"

CONTROLLED JETS OF AIR BLOW AND SPREAD THE GRAIN EVENLY ACROSS THE COMBINE SIEVE IN SLOPING AND HILLY FIELDS

The NECO Grain $aver is a high speed Blower that automatically directs controlled jets of air to the downhill side of the sieve when the combine is operating on sloping and hilly terrain. These jets of air are controlled by a pendulum-operated valve which is mounted directly to the blower.

Take a close look at the new Deutz Fahr D 7807 It's loaded with features you ll like — many you'd expect to find only on a much larger tractor Some are high lighted in the photos below

A — Efficient mechanical transmission. It s rugged but quiet And efficient as only a mechanical can be Column mounted synchromesh shifting gives easy operation — and maneuverability, too!

B — Famous air-cooled engine. First time we've used the popular 913 series engine (featured in bigger DX models) to power an "07 model in the mid-size range! Larger displacement for long service life Remarkable fuel economy for lowest operating cost And exceptional lugging ability for the toughest jobs!

C — Practical convenience throughout. Hinged engine hood flips up and out of the way, for all-'round access to engine area Short turning radius makes the D 7807 as easy to handle as many smaller tractors

D — Mechanically-powered front-wheel drive. Like all Deutz Fahr tractors the D 7807 offers the popular option of four wheel drive (D 7807A) — with efficient mechanical drive at the front! And now with tread width adjustable to 60 inches you can use Deutz-Fahr four wheel drive for all weather all crop versatility — even in 30 inch row crops!

E — High-capacity hydraulic system. Powered by tandem engine mounted direct-driven pumps Gives high lifting capacity and quick response over a wide range of applications

F — The name is Deutz-Fahr! The new D 7807 brings our line to nine models including those previously known as Deutz ' tractors Now the name is Deutz Fahr — with the same high quality performance and fuel efficiency

WHEN YOU WON'T SETTLE FOR LESS THAN THE BEST

Kernels cracked without fines... cobs and husk ground for maximum digestibility. High quality course feed provides increased bulk, allowing animals to eat more ration and better utilize the total digestible nutrients (T.D.N.) of the grains and avoid flash heat. Feeders who change to texturized feeds get better results. Beef cattle have a higher average daily gain. Dairymen report higher grain intake and 1 to 4 point increase in butterfat tests. Texturized ear corn gives you more profit per acre over shelled corn.

It's recognizing farmer cooperatives for their very special part in your success. Whether its job is production, processing, or marketing, your cooperative is a significant source of strength. And the "cooperative spirit" is a real key to accomplishments far beyond what you'd ever expect to achieve alone. We're proud of the fact that our area's agriculture owes so much to the efforts of cooperatives, including a farmer-owned and farmer-controlled financial cooperative like us. Which makes Cooperative Month a good month to remind you that we always speak your language.

NAILE to host World Shorthorn Conference

LOUISVILLE, Ky. — Shorthorn producers from around the world will gather at this fall's North American International Livestock Exposition for the Fourth World Shorthorn Conference and World Shorthorn Shows. November 8-11, will see visitors from nine countries travel to Louisville, Ky., to take part in meetings and seminars designed to acquaint the cattlemen with updated technological advances in the beef cattle industry and the world wide production of Shorthorns and their polled counterparts.

The first World Shorthorn Conference was held in 1974 in South Africa. From there, the conference was moved to Sydney, Australia in 1977, and Calgary, Alberta, Canada in 1980. The conference is held every three years, and is sponsored by the World Shorthorn Council and the hosting country. This will be the second time that the conference has been held on the North American continent, but the first time that the world wide symposium has even been held on American soil. Countries that will be represented include: Australia, Canada, Great Britain, Ireland, New Zealand, United States, Argentina, Zimbabwe, and South Africa.

Activities will be held at the Kentucky Fair & Exposition Center, and throughout the city of Louisville and the surrounding areas. Visitors will enjoy the competition of the World Shorthorn Bull and Female Show, the junior Shorhorn show, and the Second Annual North American Heifer Calf Futurity. Spectators will also witness the first Shorthorn steer futurity show.

Brockett's Ag Advice

Financial Problems?

Who doesn't have financial problems today? Certainly all types of farmers are on the down side right now. What will happen to family farm agriculture? Will it be replaced by something else? Will investors own all of the good farm land in the forseeable future? Who will these investors be – business corporations, insurance companies, foreign investors, non farming individuals, or retired farmers and their heirs. The final and most important question is what about YOU? Will you be a farmer in 1985 or 1990? If you are, then how many of your neighbors will go out of business so you can survive? These are cruel, hard-nosed questions that are not even nice to consider -am I not right? But you had better consider all of them because you hold a major part of the answer in your own hot, grubby hands. Your survival - no, not just survival, but rather your success, is a vital factor in the continuance of the family farm system in agriculture.

Some Ideas

If you are going to succeed in this not very cheery world of competitive agriculture, you will have to be better than you have been in the past. You will have to be above average especially in financial management. You will have to learn new ideas and techniques. Don't say "I'm too old". That is so much nonsense. The only time you are too old is when you are dead.

Financial Management

This is a strange entity to many farmers even though many of us have talked about it for years. Now more than ever a successful farmer is going to have to learn how to manage his finances. It is even more important than production management. Financial management will be the key as to whether you survive or not. If only we had the publicity awards for top financial managers that we have for top DHIA herds, top corn club farmers, or show winners, there might be more of you who would still be around 10 years from now.

What is financial management? It is the ability to look at, analyze, and use in decision-making items such as cost returns, profits, and balance sheets. Financial management is also the ability to know how far you can stretch a dollar before it breaks. Finally, financial management is being able to use present and past results to budget and project realistically into the future.

Now let's look at some of the things a financial manager must do:

1. Be cost conscious - know what it costs to produce a product. Once you know how much it costs to produce something, the next step iw shat makes up this cost. Average costs are not good enough. You must know your cost.

2. Be return or profit conscious - it is essential to know the cost, but it is also important to know the return. Sometimes a low cost per unit can be achieved by starvation, which results in low production per unit. The end result is usually failure.

3. Use production management tools for a number of reasons. Let's use soil tests as an example:

a. Can be used to make the best possible use of the fertilizer and lime dollar.

b. Can be used to help set priorities on fields for allocating limited fertilizer and lime dollars. In many cases, it would be wise to just use lime if dollars were short.

c. Can be used to help you put on a balanced nutrient program rather than a hit or miss program hoping for a savings of nutrients for the future.

4. Keep records - always, always, always keep and use records. They are dull. They are miserable. They are lifeless. They also may be the thing that helps you stay in business as a successful farmer. If you can put up with them, they will serve you well.

BUSINESS NEWS...

Agway introduces dairy feed

SYRACUSE, NY — A unique new concept in dairy cattle nutrition has been developed by Agway through Cooperative Research Farms (CRF), a joint research effort of 16 agricultural cooperatives in the United States and Canada. The new Pro: Right regulated carbohydrate (RC) feeds are aimed at helping dairymen maximize returns from more efficient utilization of homegrown forages.

The RC concept calls for regulating the amount of non-structural and structural carbohydrate in dairy feeds to provide an optimum "balance" of nutrients for both the rumen micro-organisms and the dairy cow. A new, more accurate measurement of carbohydrates in ingredients used to formulate dairy feeds has been developed and researched.

Eight years ago, Agway introduced Pro: Right dairy feeds with the regulated protein solubility concept, which is patented in both the United States and Canada.

Regulated protein solubility dairy feeds are sold throughout the United States and Canada by Agway and other members of CRF. Over 300,000 cows in the Northeast are being fed Pro: Right Feeds, resulting in an estimated annual increased milk income of over $23 million for Agway members.

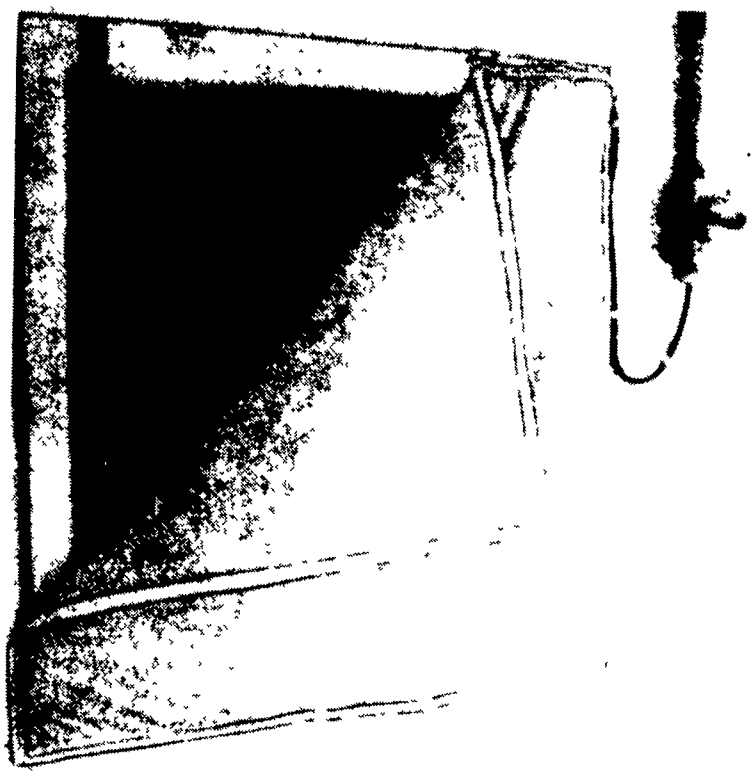
Lactating dairy cows need large amounts of energy in the form of carbohydrates. The new Pro: Right RC provides the right balance of the different forms of protein and carbohydrates to maximize total feed efficiency. This provides a more profitable ratio of pounds of grain fed to pounds of milk produced.

Results of testing at the Agway Farm Research Center in Tully, N.Y., showed a 13% increase in milk production and a 10% increase in feed efficiency compared with cows fed a different amount of readily available carbohydrate, when hay crop silage was the only forage fed.

Agway is continuing to test new regulated carbohydrate feeds and will be introducing feeds for use with other forage feeding programs soon.



New insulated fan covers for hog confinement buildings hold in heat and keep out cold.

Insulated fan covers cited

DELPHIA, IND. — Two amazing space age materials have been joined together to produce new insulated fan covers with an R factor of 8 for use in hog confinement buildings. They have just been introduced by National Building Systems, Inc., P.O. Box 256, Delphi, Ind., a division of Underhill Industries, Inc. They are available in two sizes: for 24-inch and for 18-inch fans.

The new insulated fan covers are considerably less thick and bulky than those previously on the market, but they hold in heat and keep out winter cold much better.

A recent independent engineering study found that these new fan covers are so efficient in retaining building heat that they pay for themselves in energy savings in about a year and a half, according to Robert Landis of National Building Systems.

The exterior of the fan covers is a completely new aluminum material that is not affected by the ultra-violet rays of the sun and is water, mildew and fire-resistant.

Although less than ½ inch thick, the revolutionary insulation material, called Astro-Blanket provides the same amount of insulation as other insulation materials several inches thick.

The new insulated covers are contour-shaped and finished with convenient attachment tabs that make them easy to install without tools.

A.O. Smith & Germania linking systems

MADISON, Wisc. — Linking of a computer farm management system with an automated dairy feeder has begun between A.O. Smith Farm Management Products Division and Germania Dairy Automation, Inc.

Roger H. Zorn, Farm Management Products Division general manager, and Rolf W. Reisgies, Germania Dairy Automation president confirmed that their companies will begin to link A.O. Smith's Agri-Key Dairy Herd Management Systems with Germania's Scoop II automated feeding systems this month. The experimental program is designed to confirm the feasibility of linking these two products for the benefit of farm managers, the principals said.

The announcement was made at the World Dairy Exposition here, where an Agri-Key Dairy Herd Management System is on display with a Germania Scoop II automated feeding system.

Zorn said that the anticipated conclusion of the program will result in the first commercially available "link" between A.O. Smith's Agri-Key systems and Germania's Scoop II automated dairy feeders.

"Agri-Key systems already help farmers take advantage of technology to make informed management decisions in dairy farm operations," Zorn said. "Adding the ability to monitor feeding for greater profits is a natural next step for us to assume."

Rolf Reisgies, president of Germania, said that automated feeders may be used advantageously by small or large dairy farmers. "Cows have individual characteristics in that they each look, eat, and produce differently," he said. "Why then should they be fed the same when they are inherently different from each other. Computerized feeding is a management tool with which you can fine-tune the feeding of individual cows. Computer feeding is ideal for the manager of a herd who wants to coax the highest possible production out of his cows."

Tillage system makes no difference in picking corn

BLOOMINGTON, Il. — Quality corn hybrids that yield well in conventional tillage are the ones growers using conservation methods will want to plant.

Corn breeders back that claim with five years of research at Iowa State University, Meanwhile, testing continues at an Iowa commercial corn breeding station comparing tillage practices and developing all-round, cold tolerant and disease and insect resistant hybrids.

Arnold Hallauer, research geneticist with USDA in Ames, Iowa, concluded there was no interaction of hybrids with tillage systems after reviewing 14 popular Corn Belt maturity hybrids from 1979-83 at ISU. Each hybrid was planted into four continuous corn plots. Seedbeds were prepared with fall plowing and spring disking, just spring disking, and they were no-tilled and strip-tilled. All locations received 100 lbs of potassium and phosphorus per acre based on soil test recommendations for the fine, loamy mix, and 180 lbs of nitrogen. Plots were seeded for populations of 24,000 plants/acre and the same herbicide and insecticide treatments were applied.

"We saw significant differences in tillage systems with hybrids planted in fall plowing and spring disking systems producing higher yields, better stands and lower grain moisture," Hallauer says. But those same hybrids that did the best in fall plowed and spring tilled ground also were better performers in no-till and strip-tilled plots.

For example, the five-year average of the highest yielding hybrid was 113 bu/acre on spring disking, while on no-till, yields were only 96 bu/acre. Stands were 21,000 plants/acre on spring disk, 19,700 plants/acre on no-till. And harvest moisture was 29.2 percent on spring disk and 31.8 percent on no-till.

The five-year average for a low-yielding hybrid on spring disked ground was 105 bu/acre and 88 bu/acre on no-till, with correspondingly lower plant populations and higher grain moisture.

"We're not sure why the differences were significant," says Hallauer. "Yield variation among tillage systems tells me that something may be affecting nitrogen uptake and root growth. There may be soil compaction in no-till and strip-till and not much soil aeration. There might be toxic crop residue left on the soil surface. Or maybe cole tolerance of some hybrids was a factor. However, there was no interaction of hybrids with tillage systems."

The research results lead Hallauer to conclude it's not necessary to develop and test hybrids for certain tillage systems.

"Research suggests that we should leave some residue on the soil surface to reduce erosion and planting costs," he says. "A good spring disking would be enough, and provide good soil moisture and aeration. This wouldn't be as expensive as fall plowing."

The geneticist points to another study conducted in 1980 by former graduate student, Bill Funnemark, who is continuing corn breeding research for Funk Seeds International in Algona, Iowa.

Funnemark's master's thesis focused on evaluating yield differences between cold tolerant and non-cold tolerant hybrids in conventional and reduced tillage systems.

"We assumed cold tolerant hybrids would do better in no-till since soils are cooler and wetter. However, we didn't find a lot of difference in hybrid performance." Funnemark says

The corn breeder selected 30 hybrids ranging from early to full season varieties. They were then grouped into two categories, cold tolerant and non-cold tolerant. All were observed from late April planting to harvest.

"The only difference in the hybrids appeared to be emergence," Funnemark says. In conservation tillage, hybrids emerged earlier and there were fewer days after planting to silk and pollen shed. Hybrid moisture was slightly less for cold tolerant hybrids, he adds. But any differences in yields were insignificant.

"If I were going to make a switch to conservation tillage, I'd plant a cold tolerant variety with good early growth," he says. "But first of all, I'd go with the hybrid that performed the best for me in conventional tillage. The best hybrid in conventional tillage will be the best one in conservation tillage."

Continuing research at several Funk research stations is attempting to single out that all-round variety. Near Marion, Iowa, research scientist Bob Miller is evaluating advanced testing material and commercial hybrids for yield, standability, moisture and cold tolerance. Five separate plots consist of no-till corn in soybean stubble, corn in single-tilled soybean stubble and three conventionally tilled plots.

Standard applications of P and K were applied according to soil test recommendations and enough N was applied in a split-application for a 200 bu/acre yield goal. Corn was planted in early May with populations averaging 28,000 plants/acre. Bicep applied after planting and a late June cultivation controlled weeds.

"We're looking for a hybrid that does well under all conditions," says Miller. "We'd like to have a variety that works well whether you no-till or use conventional tillage."

Miller's research is zeroing in on basic traits of that kind of hybrid. This means breeding for good disease resistance, early emergence, good germination in cooler soils, and stable yielding varieties that produce under different plant densities.

"We are doing more disease and insect research than we used to," he says. "And we're growing more material the way it's grown in the field.

"You can breed for good cold test, which we've done, but we haven't done as much in the field. When you're out there, you've got the interaction of all environmental factors — seedbed, soil, disease organisms, temperature, moisture and plant densities. As breeders, we're constantly fighting for good weed control. But you can't breed for resistance to weeds. Your best control is good early plant growth."

Early, strong emergence is one characteristic breeders and growers look for in any hybrid, whether it's for plowed or unworked ground. Research must continue to focus on this genetic advantage which would be most beneficial to all growers.

Annual meeting set by Agway

SYRACUSE, N.Y. — Several thousand farmers and guests will attend the 20th anniversary meeting of Agway Inc. Oct. 25-26 at the Onondaga County War Memorial in Syracuse, N.Y.

Featured will be reports by Richard Croner, chairman of the board of directors, and William A. Hiller, president and chief executive officer. Six farmers will be elected by the members present to three-year terms on the 18-member Agway board of directors. Members will have an opportunity to attend a seminar and to see the latest application of high tech to agriculture, at the Agway farm show.

A seminar on modern information systems for improved farm management decisions will be held Thursday morning, Oct. 25 at the Hotel Syracuse. Agway experts representing every facet of information systems and farm management will make presentations and answer questions about primary information handling systems and Agway farm information services, including farm computer systems, videotex and other new developments.

Farmers visiting the popular Agway farm show in the lower level of the War Memorial will learn about new dairy feeds, on-farm computers, integrated crop management (ICM) programs, new crop varieties, bio-gas units, and other products and services designed specifically for Northeast farmers.

U.S., Japan in ag talks

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Representatives of Japan and the United States issued the following joint statement at the close of recent agricultural consultations.

The delegations discussed the outlook for supply and demand of agricultural commodities that figure in trade between the two countries — primarily feed grains, soybeans and wheat. The Japanese side reported on the outlook for wheat, feed grain and soybean imports and explained its domestic supply and demand situation for rice.

The Japanese requested that the United States continue to provide stable supply of wheat, feed grains and soybeans to meet Japanese needs during the coming year and expressed their intention to be a stable and growing market for U.S. agricultural exports.

The United States expressed its appreciation for the important role played by agricultural trade between Japan and the United States, and confirmed its commitment to meet Japan's import needs for the coming year. Furthermore, the United States emphasized strongly that there will be no export restrictions on grains and soybeans.

3 corn, 3 alfalfas and bean announced

AMES, Ia. — Three new corn hybrids, three alfalfas, and a soybean blend, all offering high yields and disease resistance, have been introduced by Nickerson American Plant Breeders, Inc. (NAPB) under a new single brand name, AgriPro.

According to Trevor Bower, the company's director of agronomic services, the three new AgriPro corn hybrids are AP-391, AP-510 and AP-655. "AP-391 is a very high-yielding variety for its maturity," Bower said. "It has very good eye appeal, with a medium-length girthy ear, very good to excellent ear retention, and very good stalk and root strength." A key feature of this new hybrid, Bower added, is its performance capability in a wide range of environments."

All NAPB seed varieties now bear the single AgriPro name.

AP-510 is an excellent-yielding hybrid that also has very good stalk and root strength, Bower continued. "In addition, it has low ear placement for improved late season standability."

The third corn hybrid, AP-655, has good yield potential and excellent root and stalk strength, Bower noted. "It's also considered to have bery good stay-green characteristics, which gives this hybrid very good late-season standability and plant health ratings," Bower said.

AgriPro's three new alfalfas are named Dart, Arrow and Excel. Dart is an early-maturing, all-purpose variety with very high-yielding potential. It's also resistant to anthracnose, fusarium wilt, Phytophthora root rot, bacterial wilt and Verticillium wilt.

Dart also shows excellent persistence. The second new AgriPro alfalfa, Excel, has a high level of resistance to Phytophthora root rot, Fusarium wilt and bacterial wilt.

AgriPro's newest soybean is known as AP-3990. AP-3990 is a high-yielding, early Group IV blend that meets the needs of soybean growers in the Williams to Mitchell maturity.

Although NAPB has been marketing seed varieties under several brand names, including Migro in corn, RP in alfalfa and Agripro in soybeans, all new and existing varieties will now be consolidated under the brand name of AgriPro.

Minimum tillage, manure management & silage inoculent

BERKS COUNTY — New and different doesn't always mean better, as any wise farmer will tell you But Berks County farmer Gary Stoltzfus isn't against trying new or different farming techniques if they show good potential for benefitting his overall operation.

During his years of farming, Stoltzfus has adopted several techniques that have helped him conserve soil, produce crops more efficiently and preserve the yield for maximum feeding value.

Stoltzfus is a firm believer in minimum tillage. "I'm convinced that by using minimum tillage we save a lot of water and soil," he says

To avoid erosion problems, Stoltzfus uses a chisel plow instead of a moldboard plow whenever possible. He notes that it is particularly effective for corn ground

The chisel plow has worked its way into Stoltzfus' farming operation in other ways.

A dairyman, the Berks County farmer each year deals with tons of manure from his herd of 120 milk cows and a similar number of young stock. He takes advantage of the manure to manage his crop production expenses.

To reduce fertilizer expense, and utilize the nutrients in the manure, he chisels in liquid manure on his corn ground.

Stoltzfus first chiseled in liquid manure last fall. Taking advantage of the nutrients in the manure he reduced his fertilizer application. He is awaiting yield results on his 1984 corn crop to judge performance of the new fertility program.

Besides using liquid manure to fertilize his corn crop, Stoltzfus uses it to get maximum production from his alfalfa stands.

"I like to give alfalfa fields a light application late in the fall," he says. "I won't apply manure on alfalfa in the summer while the plants are growing. This helps avoid burning problems."

Each year Stoltzfus raises about 100 acres of alfalfa which he harvests as haylage and baled hay He fills a 20x60 silo early in the season with haylage. Most of the later crop is baled during the summer. He feeds out haylage year-round so a portion of the late-season alfalfa is also used to keep the silo full.

As part of his silage management program, the Berks County dairyman uses a bacterial silage inoculant to enhance the fermentation process

Gary Stoltzfus

'I hate to see dust flying behind the wagon," he says. "That's money left out in the field

"I like to put up haylage at 60% to 65%, however I will put it up wetter if I have to. Using a good silage inoculant gives me some flexibility We also used it on about 100 tons of corn silage last year," says Stoltzfus

'A good bacterial silage inoculant helps speed up fermentation in the silo and stabilizes the crop material quicker," explains Jerry Berger, silage specialist for Pioneer Hi-Bred. "By completing fermentation more quickly, heating, seepage and spoilage are reduced in the ensiled material."

Controlling heating in both his corn silage and haylage is a primary goal for Stoltzfus

Heating is a big concern in a top unloading silo," he says. "When you fill and feed at the same time, the natural heating process can be a problem. We use an inoculant to reduce our heating problems and keep the haylage coming out cool

Seaboard expansion doubles N.J. egg production

WARREN COUNTY, N.J. — After many years of rather steady decline in egg production in New Jersey, the poultry industry is about to boom. And boom it will as Seaboard Foods' new poultry facility in southern Warren County gets into full swing The new operation, located a few miles north of Asbury, is being built to house 1.2 million layers.

Most recent New Jersey Crop Reporting Service statistics indicate a state total of about 1.2 million laying hens. So, the poultry industry in the state will double!

Seaboard is by no means at capacity. The first two buildings in operation are 52 by 546 feet in size, and have a capacity of 84,240 layers per building. Additional buildings are scheduled.

The houses are environmentally controlled, windowless, there will be 14 in all on completion. There are 400 light bulbs per house, 9,140 water fountains. Birds are in a staggered high rise installation. Manure drops into a huge basement-like area. There are 25 fans, 48" in size, in each house to move air.

The system for egg collection involves 54 miles of egg belt in the production units and cross conveyors.

Feed Consumption

It is estimated that the 1.2 million birds will require about 12,000 acres of corn to supply the corn requirement for one production year. The birds will eat 140 tons of feed a day, drink 48,000 gallons of water daily.

There will be a feed mill constructed on site. The farm expects to buy local grain for most of its needs. The farm is located in proximity to some of Warren and Hunterdon County's best land. This was one of Seaboard's early considerations in deciding on location.

Manure disposal is an important item in planning. Poultry manure is an excellent fertilizer. Cook College Poultry and Soils Specialists, concur on that The value of poultry manure stored in the lower level of a house of this type is well documented.

John Bezpa, Poultry Specialist at Rutgers, tells us that 1.2 million laying birds will produce over 14,000 tons of manure annually. And that's enough fertilizer for about 1,400 acres of cropland.

Close To Market

New Jersey, back in the 40's and 50's, was a major egg producing state. This was to great degree becaus of our closeness to market. The industry underwent great changes in the late 50's, 60's and 70's that saw the table egg industry move to the south. At least, it moved out of New Jersey.

Now with higher transportation costs, advances in technology, the shift is back to areas closer to the big markets. And that made New Jersey, and specifically, southern Warren County a good choice. The state now produces only 13% of the state's egg needs and 5% of the eggs consumed in the NJ/NY area

Seaboard has numerous large poultry operations in the east, in Maryland, Ohio, and Pennsylvania. Seaboard headquarters is in Lakewood, N.J.

Deal forthrightly with ag chemical issues

WHITE SULPHUR SPRINGS, W. VA. — Jack D. Early, President of the National Agricultural Chemicals Association (NACA), has called on the industry "to deal forthrightly with the most difficult issues facing our industry."

"Let's not wait for government to do it for us," he told NACA's 51st annual meeting. "The result may be far worse and keep us on the defensive where we have been too often these recent years."

Early proposed, for example, that the agrichemicals industry make a commitment to resolve the data gap issue "before we are forced into it." In exchange for our commitment, "we need to secure an agreement giving us a reasonable amount of time to eliminate key data gaps for existing products."

Early said it is "becoming increasingly clear that EPA (Environmental Protection Agency) is moving toward a position of permitting no further registrations with incomplete data."

Early described himself as "encouraged" by his industry's willingness to engage in dialogue with its adversaries. "This trend toward moderation and conciliation rather than confrontation," he said, should help resolve some of the differences "which have tended to keep us in a state of perpetual confrontation with the public, press and environmentalists."

Early said the industry's legislative and regulatory actions must aim to attain "the confidence of the public, the press and lawmakers at every level of government. In spite of our best efforts, we are still perceived–unfairly, to be sure–as secretive. We have not yet fully convinced the public that we are not hiding health and safety data and putting unsafe products on the market to which people are being involuntarily exposed."

Woodlot programs planned in N.J.

FLEMINGTON, N.J. — Much of Hunterdon County's land is in woods. Many woodlot owners qualify for farmland assessment if they are actively managing it. Automatic EARCORN BLOWER MILL

Automatic pioneered the development of the unique crusher unit which shells corn and shreds the cob ahead of the rollers which crack the kernels and reduce the cob further. No troublesome screens to change or slow down the capacity. It comes with 8-foot hydraulic intake auger and 54-inch blower. Also available with an 11-inch tilting discharge auger with 10-foot reach in place of the blower.

- UNIQUE CRUSHER ROLLS shell the corn, crush the cob ahead of the rolls, no screens to plug.
- FATIGUE-PROOF DRIVE SHAFTS, ground and polished.
- CARBON STEEL ROLLS, hardened to a 56 Rockwell "C", outperform other rolls in capacity and durability.
- 20-SPLINE, 1¾-inch PTO shaft with shear pin protection.

8.8% A.P.R. financing: If you buy any new Case 90 or 94 Series tractor before October 31, 1984, and finance it through J I Case Credit Corporation, we'll provide financing for up to 48 months at 8.8% A.P.R.

No finance charges til June 1, 1985. (94 Series) or Sept. 1, 1985 (90 Series). Instead of 8.8% financing, you can choose another very attractive option: a waiver of all finance charges until June 1, 1985 (94 Series) or Sept. 1, 1985 (90 Series).

Either way, you'll get all the impressive benefits of owning a new Case 90 or 94 Series tractor.

Our new "300" timber column!

.6 pound of penta

Morton Buildings' new laminated column is treated to a .6 pound per cubic foot retention of pentachlorophenol preservative. This new treatment meets the federal government specification (USDA Form W 00571J) for the proper treatment of timber columns buried below ground.

100% sapwood penetration

The No. 1 Southern Yellow Pine components of the laminated column are kiln dried before treating to remove much of the water content, assuring 100% penetration of the sapwood.

To guarantee the new requirements are met, an independent inspection service regularly visits the treatment plants. All lumber not conforming to our specification is rejected or re-treated.

Morton Buildings demonstrates its confidence in these improvements by now offering a 50-year warranty on the timber column. Our warranty also includes 5 years against paint checking or peeling; 5 years against paint fade and chalk; 5 years against red rust caused by acid rain; 5 years against roof leaks; and 5 years against damage due to snow and wind loads. That's confidence!!

Farm Talk

Jerry Webb

There is a frankness in rural America these days that is allowing farmers and their families to come forward and talk about their problems and concerns. Traditionally farmers have been considered salt of the earth types who dealt with all sorts of adversities and never batted an eye. They grew our food, kept our country side pretty and managed to get along somehow. In fact, most of us think of a farm as an ideal place to live and raise a family. Given a choice an awful lot of American people would like to at least live on a farm.

Lately some farmers and their families are starting to talk a little bit about some problems. Through the pages of farm magazines and in farm meetings they are expressing their concerns about their way of life and their future. And some are even admitting that being a farmer or part of a farm family is not all sunshine, fresh air and bright tomorrows. There are those nagging little concerns like how to pay the mortgage, and where to get operating capitol for next year's production. Some farmers are starting to complain about father-son partnerships and other family business arrangements, about the stress created within the family from long hard hours of work and economic uncertainties. Some farm families are even talking about divorces, father-son breakups, depression and coping with the uncertainty of farm life.

Add another topic to the list that farmers are willing to talk about. Finding a mate. Perhaps we just assume that all farmers have spouses. That they live in neat white houses at the end of tree lined lanes where little children play in the sunshine and young livestock romp in grassy fields. But now some young farmers and some not so young, both male and female, are saying that farming at times can be an isolated occupation with little or no chance for social contact and a certain amount of desperation involved in the pairing up process.

Farmers are saying that the very nature of their work makes them less than ideal suitors and maybe not even particularly good catches. Their hours can be quite long and uncertain, so it's hard for them to plan a date and then get there on time. Often farm emergencies preempt everything else. They don't get a regular pay check and so at times may be hard pressed for cash and certainly there are times when the adversities of farming make them less than ideal companions.

The physical location of farms puts most single farmers at a disadvantage. Often they are great distances from population centers and so come in contact with very few possible mates. The city dweller who wants to meet someone has a hundred choices. But what about the farmer? Is he apt to find someone in a singles bar who's willing to go back to the farm and share his life milking cows, bailing hay, and harvesting soybeans?

Here in the urbanized East the problem is not that bad. Almost any farmer is within an hour's drive of a fairly good sized town But that's not necessarily true in some of the wide open spaces where farmers and ranchers ply their trade.

I recall many of the young farmers back when I was in college who courted the students from a nearby girls' college. Some of them wooed and won those fair maidens in the atmosphere of a university town only to later face the harsh reality of going back to the farm. I've often wondered how some of those match-ups worked out.

The farm boy who marries the neighbor's daugther right out of high school doesn't face this dilemma. But what about the fellow who gets through college and waits a few years until he is established before seeking a mate Let's say he goes to town and finds the girl of his dreams. She is beautiful, educated, loves him dearly but isn't about to give up a career in her chosen profession to move to Cactus Flat, South Dakota or some other out of the way rural location where there are no job opportunities. There are also plenty of farm wise folks who just don't want to settle down on the farm. Many of them left small towns and rural areas for the bright lights and what seemed to be better opportunities.

A lot of farm men and some farm women for that matter are starting to talk about this problem and they are seeking help. Some are even advertising for spouses. Farm Journal Magazine has agreed to collect names and descriptions and circulate a list. Perhaps there's a computer dating service that could cater to a farm clientele. Maybe there are other social agencies that can aid in this process.

It's encouraging that farmers are willing to talk about this problem. That's a first step. Maybe the next step is to become a little more socially oriented-become involved in activities away from the farm and learn more about what is going on outside of agriculture. Anybody whose gone through the courting process knows that packaging has a lot to do with the product. Perhaps some of these single farmers have spent too much time and effort establishing a business and have allowed the package to deteriorate.

No doubt there are a lot of lonely farmers looking for mates. I'm fairly sure they won't find those mates from the seat of a combine or through the window of a dairy barn. Single farm men and women who are serious about marriage need to budget some time and money for the process. In the mean time maybe they should take a serious look at themselves and what they have to offer.

Maybe the best thing is to take a bold imaginative step as one Kansas farm girl did. She ran an ad in the local farm paper when she was 36 years old. It said "Attractive single woman would like to meet a rancher between 30 and 40, must be genuine and sincere." The ad cost her $5 and resulted in a marriage the following summer.

If there are single farmers who would like to be part of the Farm Journal list, send your name, address, age and a short description to Meg Gaige, Farm Journal, 910 West State Street, Ithaca, NY 14850. She promises to put together a list and circulate it as soon as possible.

Forest Products Week slated

DOVER, DEL. — The Delaware Department of Agriculture, Forestry Section, Delaware's Biomass Energy Program and the Delaware Tree Farm Committee along with the forest products industry in Delaware will be joining the country in observing National Forest Products Week, Oct. 21 - 27. The role of America's forests in producing thousands of wood and paper products to meet people's needs and help the country's economy is the message of National Forest Products Week.

"America Grows On Trees" is the theme of the Week that is sponsored by the nation's forestry community. According to Brent Halsey, Chairman of the American Forest Institute, "the forest products industry is committed to improving the health and productivity of forestland under all ownerships."

"The industry's credo is that although we can not make more land, we can make better use of what we have through continually improved management of our great renewable resource - Trees."

Toward this same end, a workshop designed to acquaint forest landowners, the forest products industry, residential and potential industrial wood burners, and interested individuals with the various forest management techniques and harvesting practices of bottomland hardwood and pine sites will be held Saturday, Oct. 27, at the Redden State Forest Lodge from 8:30 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. (registration fee is $3 per person or $5 per couple, includes luncheon & bus). The day's activities will be highlighted by a tour of sites on Redden State Forest and the 1984 Delaware Outstanding Tree Farmer of the Year.

Nancy Milliken, Forest Products Utilization Specialist with Delaware Forest Service said "the goal of this workshop is to tie together forest management, harvesting and fuel burning. These three elements are very closely connected, and all influence the quantity of types of forests and forest products we will have in the future."

"By making this key connection, we hope that Delawareans can then choose that option which best fits their needs, and in turn, all Delawareans will benefit. It is also an opportune time to recognize and honor the Delaware forest products industry and outstanding forest landowners in Delaware," Milliken said.

For more information and to register for this workshop, contact Nancy Milliken at (302) 736-4811 or 800-282-8685. To ensure adequate luncheon preparations and space on the bus, please pre-register or call in by Oct. 24.

Horse expansion can cause erosion problems

WEST CHESTER — "Horse owners keep twelve horses on three acres of pasture, then wonder why the grass is short.

"Chester County is attracting horse owners who are familiar with the feeding and care of horses but who know very little about the feeding and care of the soil that grows the pasture, hay and grain for the feeding of those horses.

"This has been a good year for growing grass. Don't know what they will do in a dry year.

"It will probably get worse before the horse owners realize that they need to use good conservation practices on their land."

Pownall Jones, Toughkenamon, noted destructive erosive effects of overgrazing the pastures. "With no protective cover, the horses' hoofs compact the top soil. With heavy rains, the valuable topsoil is eroded and washed away," he observed.

Charles Harris, Cochranville, mentioned the increase in number of horse farms, riding rings and paddocks in that area. Directors agreed that special efforts should be made to provide soil/water conservation information and assistance to horse owners.

Debra Granison, County Director of ASCS, said that the deadline for assistance for reestablishing washed-out conservation practices had been extended until Oct. 31. Farmers may also receive assistance for stream bank restoration and fence rehabilitation, Granison said.

Jenny Russell, Lewisville, Chairman of the Awards Committee, said that the Committee is seeking nominations for Chester County Conservation Farmer of the Year award. "They will be judged", Russell said," on the basis of sound conservation measures on their farm operation. Also considered will be manure management practices, pesticide management, and successful application of low-cost practices to conserve and protect soil and water resources."

"Nominations may be made by neighbors, wives or husbands, or from the farmer himself or herself", Russell said. Application blanks may be obtained from the District Office, 235 W. Market St., West Chester, PA 19382–or by calling 696-5126. "Nominations should be returned by Nov. 1", Russell emphasized.

Russell also reported on the cost-share program for the Chesapeake Bay clean-up. "Water quality and nutrient management are the priority practices", she said. Farmers with the "worst-case" problems will be given highest priority according to the guidelines issued by the State Bureau of Soil/Water Conservation. Approximately one million dollars is being made available for the 6 lower counties in the Chesapeake Bay watershed. Only the Elks Creeks and the Octoraro Creek feed into the Bay from Chester County. It is estimated that there could be one hundred fifty to two hundred thousand dollars available for conservation practices in Chester County. With up to an 85% cost-shares, as many as twelve or fifteen farmers could cost-share in the program.

Russell reported that tentative approval had been given by the State Educational Sub-committee for funding of three demonstration projects in the County. One would be the seed money for a crops improvement association. Another would be the development of a self-guided tour of manure management facilities. The thir would be no-till demonstration plots established in cooperation with vocational agricultur departments in the schools.

Land owners accepted by the Directors as Cooperators with the District and eligible for the technical services of the Soil Conservation, U.S.D.A. were Jonathan S. Esh, W. Nottingham Twp.; Marc S. Balick, Elk Twp Patrice Miller/Seder, E Fallowfield Twp.; Mrs. Irma Stoltzfus, Valley Twp.; Eugene Liesau, S. Coventry Twp.; James I. Plyler, Jr., Newlin Twp. and William H. Sawyer, W. Vincent Twp.

Eastern holds annual meeting

SYRACUSE — In a reorganization meeting of the Board of Directors following the 62nd Annual Meeting of Eastern Milk Producers Cooperative, Daniel W. Fox of Ephrata, was re-elected Assistant Secretary-Treasurer of the cooperative. He will serve his second term under Earl R. Forwood of Hop Bottom, newly re-elected President of Eastern.

Also elected to serve as officers of the Board were Vice President Robert K. Hill, Jr., of Memphis, N.Y. Secretary George R. Fuller of Cohocton, N.Y., and George A. Stambaugh of Newville, was re-elected Treasurer.

Fox started farming in 1975, when he took over the farm owned by his father, Henry P. Fox, an Eastern member since 1960. Fox was born and raised on this farm in Lancaster County.

Fox himself joined Eastern in 1975, and was elected delegate of the Honeybrook local. He served as delegate until he was elected district Director in June 1981.

Fox and his wife, Kathy, along with sons, Randall and Robbie, operate a 74-acre farm, milking 40 head of Holsteins. He is active in the Pennsylvania Farmers Association, as well as other dairy-related organizations.

Eastern Milk Producers Cooperative Association, Inc., is the largest milk marketing and bargaining cooperative in the Northeast, with a 62-year tradition of serving the needs of member dairy farmers. The co-op headquartered in Syracuse, NY, has over 4,200 members.

THEY HOLD DOWN MORE THAN ONE JOB.

Kubota's mid-sized tractors are very versatile. You'll find them at work on farms, in parks, nurseries, estate homes and even on construction sites.

The reason is simple. Our mid-sized L-Series tractors come with features you'd expect to find only on bigger, heavier machines.

For example, strong diesel engines with PTO horsepower from 19.59 to 40. Hydraulic or manual shuttle-shift. A choice of 2- or 4-wheel drive on most models. A hefty 3-point hitch. And more.
